Sonar scans marina for hurricane debris

Crew maps damage before cleanup, repairs

PANAMA CITY — Firefighters slowly lowered expensive sonar equipment into the near pitch-black depths of the waters surrounding the Panama City Marina on Friday.

Tied to a Panama City Fire Department boat, the equipment was moved several feet to a predetermined position in the water. Within seconds, the device sent images to a nearby laptop managed by Adam Wendt, a diving instructor and research assistant at Florida State University.

“You see, that’s some debris,” Wendt said, pointing to yellow spots on his computer screen.

 Members of FSU Panama City’s Underwater Crime Scene Investigation Program, the Panama City Fire Department and the Bay County Sheriff’s Office teamed up Friday to survey parts of the city’s marina. During the coming weeks, the team will do the same for the St. Andrews Marina and Snug Harbor.

“With this we’ll get an idea of exactly what’s down there; then the next step will be for a company to clean it all up,” said Mayor Greg Brudnicki, who viewed the findings from the sonar surveying set to be unveiled in May.

Jerome Fleeman, a captain with the city fire department and a diving safety instructor with the Florida State University crime scene program, said the project was a good chance to train students in the field. TYNDALL AIR FORCE BASE — Tyndall Air Force Base has finished destroying thousands of pieces of ordnance in an operation that caused explosions recently heard around Panama City.

The munitions were too damaged to be shipped, used or stored. The disposal was done by Tyndall’s Explosive Ordnance Disposal (EOD) unit.

“This was an extraordinary circumstance because of the amount,” said EOD team leader Tech Sgt. Jason Ostberg.

Thousands of pieces of ammunition — 99 percent of which were aircraft flares — were disposed of during the operation.

WASHINGTON — As the White House gears up for the 2020 campaign, it’s pressing the case that Democrats are tallying behind what it’s calling the policies of “socialism.”

Trying to portray Democrats as out of step with ordinary Americans, Vice President Mike Pence said in a speech Friday at the Conservative Political Action Conference that the choice in the next election is “between freedom and socialism, between personal responsibility and government dependence.”

It was the latest step in a coordinated effort by President Donald Trump and his allies to drive up enthusiasm among the GOP base by sowing fears about the policies pushed by Democrats.

“Mike Pence is one of the most underappreciated people in modern American history,” said Zavorol, noting that he was the only person to reach the US Senate floor unopposed by a member of his own party. “He is destroying the Republican Party, and there is no way he can be stopped.”

Pence’s speech at the CPAC was among the most notable moments of the event, which brings together the conservative faithful to hear from political leaders, potential presidential candidates and other speakers.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Saturday, March 2, the 61st day of 2019. There are 304 days left in the year.

Today is High Holiday:

In 1936, the Republic of Texas formally declared its independence from Mexico.

In 1777, Republican Rutherford B. Hayes was declared the winner of the 1876 presidential election over Democrat Samuel J. Tilden, even though Tilden had won the popular vote.

In 1917, Puerto Ricans were granted U.S. citizenship as President Woodrow Wilson signed the Jones-Shafroth Act.

In 1939, Panamanian Evaristo Porcelli was elected pope on his first try; his name was Pius XII. The Massa- chusetts legislature voted to ratify the Bill of Rights, even after the first 13 amendments to the U.S. Constitution had gone into effect.

In 1955, Wilbur Chamberlain scored 100 points for the Philadelphia Warriors in a game against the New York Knicks, an NBA record that stood until 1990.

In 1947, the U.S. Navy purchased an island of comic Charles Lindbergh from extortionists for his grave in Croix, near Zurich, Switzerland. (The body was recovered near Lake Geneva 11 weeks later.)

In 1865, the government announced that it was ending $20 bills for AEBs that detected antibodies to the virus, allowing possibly con- taminated blood to be excluded from the blood supply.

Charges were filed against the woman accused of abuse or violating human rights, steal from the Venezuelan people or undermine Venezuela's democracy are not welcomed in the United States, Abrams said. “Neither are their family members who enjoy an enriched lifestyle at the expense of the liberty and prosperity of millions of Venezuelans.”

The man was arrested last year by the Trump administration as it increased the international pressure on Maduro, who was re-elected in 2018 and is still in power. Abrams supported the abuse on Thursday in St. Louis, Missouri, where the mayor was the latest to express regret over the removal of St. Louis police chief John Nonn from his post.

This is a purchase that is an extended-buy purchase. It’s not something you go pick up a lead of bread, milk, or whatever. I mean, you do that at the grocery store, but what you’re going to do is you’re going to put up a lead of a bathtub, milk, and bread, and you’re going to work with David Koehler, a marketing professor at the University of Illinois-Chicago.

Dear Dave,

You're out a Roth IRA, which would be $6,500 a year in your case, before I did anything with the 401(k). That's probably about the level I recommend, so I’m not paying out of that. Our retirement plan is managed by a third-party life insurance company, but I don’t know even the names of the partners involved, how the insurance company handles the money and what to do with it. Can you give me a bit of guidance?

Tesla's Model 3

By Tom Krisher

The Associated Press

DETROIT — When Gary Bornstein spent $52,000 for a Tesla Model 3 last summer, he did it without taking a test drive or even seeing the car that he now owns.

The Los Angeles New York financial consultant did consult and order the car online, a process that Tesla CEO Elon Musk says is gambling on being attractive to more buyers in the future.

Musk on Thursday announced a radical change in Tesla’s business model. The Silicon Valley electric car maker plans to sell its stores worldwide and go directly to people trying to cut overhead so it can sell more cars and still make money.

It’s a huge risk and major departure from the way people buy or lease cars in the U.S. Many states require cars to be purchased from physical dealerships so buyers can check out the car and research online but travel to a store to kick the tires, make the deal and drive away.

Still, experts say the plans may be right. A tech-savvy generation that grew up ordering something on Amazon and using Amazon right—rues has reached college age and is Tesla’s target market. But even before this, spending so much money without a test drive, especially for a car, is a major change in research and buying habits.

In an online survey, more than 78 percent of all 36 million Tesla Model 3s ordered so far were purchased online last year rather than a store, and 82 percent of buyers did not test drive the cars. He’s also offering to let people test drive the cars and return the money back within seven days or 10,000 miles after the sale.

Bornstein, 57, saying that Tesla has invested more than $1 billion in marketing, said that 78 percent of all Model 3s were purchased online last year rather than a store, and 82 percent of buyers did not test drive the cars. He’s also offering to let people return the cars and get a refund within seven days or 10,000 miles after the sale.

Bornstein is a Tesla new-car site Carvana, which does sales entirely online, but he’s never heard of sales returns last year to over $4,000, even though it started selling vehicles in the U.S. about 18 months ago. Most people at least give them peace of mind if the car goes back.

This data is about online auto purchases. Edmunds, which provides content to The Associated Press, has found that 57 percent of people buy a car and would buy the same one again. The leap of faith may not work for everyone.

Students deserve high standards

A letter by the Jewish people of Allentown. They feel that the religion of the prophet Jeremiah sent them to America, which is the only country in the New World. It is the only country that has a chance of being a nation.

A letter by Michael Cohen is the result of decades of parochial ignorance in this country. Michael Cohen is the worst self as he makes lies with empathy for the people of Allentown, Pennsylvania. It's like Youngstown, Ohio and its cities in which they live, too unaligned with doing things. Too ugly, too compromised Conservative institutions in Washington have many more commitments to be effective. At the end of the Bush administration and beginning of the Obama (the only to the Citizens United case), grassroots groups were springing up to help conserva- tives down to the local level. There were training sessions for conservative activists on simple things such as the best way to write editorials to local papers. These grassroots groups provided tools for local activists to contact their state legislators. They explained how to find city council meeting times and how to show up to speak on an issue. They encouraged conservative activists to run for their school boards. As the tea party rose, conser- vative organizations began to occur. For example, one of the local offices is the one for fighting back Obama. They abandoned the fights in the states. They left behind conservatives who had con- vinced themselves — often not have a meaningful impact in Washington on. Once Don- ald Trump got elected, most conservative groups focused on protecting their precious presidents and advancing their agendas. Organizations that once would have fought mass- sive spending bills looked the other way. As conservative- ists retreated from national politics, they could not stomach the character flaw of the president or the direc- tion of the Republican Party. Donors and institutions who had once found ways to keep people engaged locally began to help their money elsewhere.

There is now a class of American conservatives who is mostly checked out of politics. They would be engaged, but they will not diligently themselves with Washington. They want help advocating for good government, but they would be engaged, but they will not diligently themselves with Washington. ST. GEORGE ISLAND — When a fire or health emergency happens on St. George Island, calls for help are answered by the nonprofit and all-volunteer fire department and emergency medical services. Those first responders rely on donations from the community to stay properly equipped and trained, with the largest single fundraiser being the annual St. George Island Regional Charity Chili Cook-Off and Auction.

The event will take place on Saturday, March 2, with contestants selling cups of chili samples to help raise funds, in addition to their contest fees. Saturday’s schedule begins with the 5K Red Pepper Run at 8 a.m., followed by cook meetups and cooking time, judging, and other activities throughout the day. Awards will be announced at 3:30 p.m.

PANAMA CITY — Crystal McNeal began her first year as a principal of Oscar Patterson Elementary School excited for a new challenge.

The smallest of 19 elementary schools in the district, Patterson had only narrowly escaped closure the year before, following consecutively low school grades. Now finally out of the danger zone, the school was starting fresh with a new principal and an almost completely new staff.

Then, Hurricane Michael hit.

Today, Oscar Patterson is closed and the future of the community after their school was closed or the school was starting fresh with a new principal and an almost completely new staff.

But McNeal's new job is to search for the students who didn’t return. And she’s not the only Bay District principal with new work.

McNeal is part of a select group of principals who have found new ways to help students and the community after their schools were closed or have taken on more responsibilities because of the hurricane.

“There were so many kids missing,” McNeal said. “We started after the hurricanes with about 927 kids that were unaccounted for — they didn’t show up, we had heard nothing from them. I’ve been in gas stations, putting up signs in restrooms, just letting people know school is in.”

Patterson had formerly been a principal with new responsibilities because of the hurricane.

McNeal was even part of a select group of principals who have found new ways to help students and the community after their schools were closed or have taken on more responsibilities because of the hurricane.

“Those schools were even provided with a van by the district to go out and track down students potentially still living at their old addresses. Parents who were difficult to get into contact with before the storm became easier to locate.”

Dr. Seuss Day a hit at Northside Elementary

While today officially is Dr. Seuss’ birthday, Friday was officially Dr. Seuss Day at Northside Elementary School, where local “celebrities” were invited to read their favorite story by the famed author.

Volunteers ranging from Bay District Schools Superintendent Bill Husfelt and School Board Member Steve Moso to News Herald Editor Mike Canals and WMBB-TV News Anchor Amy Hoyt and Teacher of the Year Becky Peltonen dressed as a chicken — along with firefighters, law enforcement officers, doctors and more — dropped by as part of Read Across America week.

MCNELL was even part of a select group of principals who have found new ways to help students and the community after their schools were closed or have taken on more responsibilities because of the hurricane.

Company owners can get shock from huge tax bills

By Joyce M. Rosenberg

The Associated Press

Amy Baxter’s business took off after she appeared on “Shark Tank” with her device that blocks pain from injections — orders flowed in and she bulked up her inventory.

But after sales hit a temporary speed bump, Baxter learned there was no tax break for the merchandise she hadn’t sold.

“I remember sitting at my parents’ house, real-izing there was no way out of this,” said Baxter, a pedi-atric emergency physician whose company, Pain Care Labs, sells Buzzy, a device that uses a combination of cold and vibration to reduce injection discomfort.

“Our tax bill was so huge I had to liquidate my life insurance policy to pay it, and I didn’t have the inventory until two years later,” Baxter said.

Baxter missed her deadline because her long-time accountant, a specialty who wasn’t working with physi-cians, not manufacturers, without the right advice, Baxter couldn’t plan for a big tax bill.

Unfamiliarity with the tax code historically has been a common problem leading to huge tax bills, and it’s one that’s likely to be more pervasive this year as owners and practitioners try to understand the new law, said Scott Berger, an accountant with Kaufman Rossin in Boca Raton. Those without the proper understanding of these changes in tax laws. Those owners are in danger of spending more than they save, Farra said.

“Good books and records are like a dashboard on your car. You need to know how fast you’re driving and how much gas you have and whether you’re overheat-ing,” Farra said.

Startup owners can run into tax problems because they’re trying to save money. Many try to handle tax planning and returns themselves but don’t understand the complexities of tax laws. Those owners are in danger of spending more than they save, Farra said. If owners underpay their taxes or need an install-ment payment plan, they will have interest and pen-alty charges that might cost more than a tax adviser’s fees.

FORT WALTON BEACH — To bring more attention to some of the dogs up for adoption, the Panhandle Animal Welfare Society teamed up with the Ocean City-Wright Fire District for photos you didn’t know you needed to see.

PAWS Director Dee Thompson said the cute photos, which include one of a puppy lurking from a firefighter’s uniform pants pocket, are part of an effort to get the adoptable animals more exposure.

“Each one of these organizations have their own Facebook pages and web pages, and each one of the firefighters has their own,” Thompson said. “It’s like this is going to be a whole extra venue that these dogs are getting seen in and a different light.”

All the dogs featured in the photos are up for adoption and tugged at the heartstrings of some of the firefighters.

But Ocean City-Wright Public Information Officer Jennifer Arne said they didn’t need a firehouse dog despite the desire for one.

“I had to tell them they (PAWS) brought 13 dogs, and they take it,” she said.

Thompson said she was nervous about taking the dogs, most of them puppies, to a fire station because the alarms and loud noises could have made the photo shoot difficult.

“They were all really well-behaved,” Thompson said.

Luckily, the five firefighters who participated didn’t receive an urgent call during the shoot. Arne said the department enjoyed helping PAWS.

“We’re all about the community, and anything we can do to help,” Arne said.

It might have been the first of many similar photo-shoots for PAWS animals. Thompson said she hopes to branch out to more fire and police departments. The same puppies will take a trip to the Okaloosa Island Fire District next.

She added that photos with Okaloosa County commissioners also are possible.

For more information about the adoptable dogs, contact the PAWS shelter in Fort Walton Beach at 850-547-1121 or visit the PAWS website at www.paws-shelter.org.

WASHINGTON — A 40-foot-tall concrete cross in public land in a Maryland suburb of Washington is at the center of a legal battle in the Supreme Court. But similar monuments in other states in the country could be affected by the Supreme Court's ruling, states have told the justices.

The District of Columbia vs. National Zoological Park Foundation case, which is being heard by the Supreme Court, involves a cross installed by the National Zoological Park Foundation in 1950, the cross is part of a memorial honoring young men from the area who fought and died in World War II. The case is being argued by Justice Elena Kagan, who said she hopes to see a cross on the tower again.

“The Court is the keeper of the tower’s history,” she said. “We have a constitutional right to have a cross on the tower.”

The case involves a cross that was put up for the gathering of the Christ-child, or Epiphany. Villagers came to join his family in the days of Christ's life, for various reasons.

West Florida pitcher Jeya Prasad pitched the entire game and allowed only three hits while striking out 15 batters to help her team to improve to 4-0.

“I think that she kept them off balance for sure,” West Florida coach Belinda Pitman said. “I think she worked the rise ball and the offspeed pitch very well tonight and kind of kept their batters off balance.”

INDIANAPOLIS – There’s a quarterback at the NFL scouting combine that New York Giants coach Pat Shurmur has absolutely fallen in love with, and it’s not Kyle Murray, Dwayne Haskins, Drew Lock, Daniel Jones or any other. It’s Kyle Shurmur, his 22-year-old son who threw for 6-4 and 221 pounds, a degree in economics and business management.

In preparing for the combine, Kyle Shurmur did his homework. He’s made great decisions. He did an excellent job in high school giving himself the opportunity to go to a place like Vanderbilt. He graduated in just 3 years, helped them win games. He’s a good player.

Shurmur is not quite in the same league as the top eight QBs, but at 6-foo-4 and 221 pounds, a degree in economics and business management.

Calipari said Friday that Travis – a Stan- ford product – was “unbelievable keeping his form. I’ve heard his name” during the first press conference of the season.

INDIANAPOLIS – There’s a quarterback at the NFL scouting combine that New York Giants coach Pat Shurmur has absolutely fallen in love with, and it’s not Kyle Murray, Dwayne Haskins, Drew Lock, Daniel Jones or any other. It’s Kyle Shurmur, his 22-year-old son who threw for 6-4 and 221 pounds, a degree in economics and business management.

In preparing for the combine, Kyle Shurmur did his homework. He’s made great decisions. He did an excellent job in high school giving himself the opportunity to go to a place like Vanderbilt. He graduated in just 3 years, helped them win games. He’s a good player.

Shurmur is not quite in the same league as the top eight QBs, but at 6-foo-4 and 221 pounds, a degree in economics and business management.

Calipari said Friday that Travis – a Stan- ford product – was “unbelievable keeping his form. I’ve heard his name” during the first press conference of the season.

The Associated Press

In brief

OTTAWA, Ont. – Senators fired coach Guy Boucher on Friday and named assistant Marc Crawford as the interim replacement with the NHL’s last-place team in a game, losing 84-20. The 38-year old Boucher coached the Senators to one victory of the Stanley Cup Final in his first season behind the bench, but very quickly got Tampa Bay to within one win of the final in 2011, but his stop in Ottawa was a much different experience.

General manager Pierre Dorion had given Boucher a vote of confidence as recently as Monday. He said he decided that change was needed a few days after the Senators last game of the season would be proposed. players who receive a 2-point conversion are present. DEAR ABBY

How long should I continue a friendship that isn't what it used to be? — WANTS OUT

Dear Abby,

I have a pretty good but not perfect friendship. I think we originally met through a mutual interest in a hobby, but we have since become friends over other interests as well. We spent a lot of time together, including vacations and other activities. But over the past few years, things have changed. While I still enjoy spending time with my friend, I feel like we are not as close as we used to be. I don't want to end the friendship, but I don't want to continue it if it is not fulfilling for both of us.

What should I do? How can I determine if the friendship is still worth continuing?

Sincerely,

DOE

Dear DOE,

It's understandable that you might be feeling unsure about the direction of your friendship. While it's not unusual for friends to drift apart as interests and life circumstances change, it's important to consider what the friendship means to you.

First, take some time to reflect on why you value this friendship. What do you enjoy about spending time with your friend? What have you enjoyed about being together? This can help you determine if there is still value in continuing the friendship.

Next, consider whether you are willing to make a genuine effort to strengthen your bond. Are you willing to listen more, communicate more, and perhaps even work through any differences that may have arisen? If so, you might be able to rekindle the friendship.

If you decide that you don't want to continue the friendship, it's important to approach the situation with kindness and respect. Consider having a conversation with your friend to express your feelings and discuss the changes you've noticed. Be open to their perspective and consider their feelings as well.

Ultimately, the decision to end or continue a friendship is up to you. If you feel that it's best to let go, then it's important to do so with grace and compassion. If you decide to continue the friendship, be willing to make the effort to nurture it and keep it meaningful for both of you.

Sincerely,

Dear Abby
