Guamana Gazette
Cape Town, South Africa (AP)—Racial disturbances continued in South Africa today, according to the government, for the first time all around the city. Cape Town. Witnesses at any one place was killed when police opened fire on striking workers in a segregated township of Cape Town. On a highway outside Johannesburg a black man was stoned to death by six other blacks.

In Cape Town, bystanders ran screaming and choking from tear gas in the first major racial violence in a white area of the city.

Shops closed down and traffic in the area came to a halt.

The violence came as thousands of demonstrators, driven out of a protest march against South Africa’s policy of apartheid, took to the streets.

In another part of the city, police reported a black man was shot and killed during a race riot in Soweto when his car was stopped. The death brings the number of persons killed since racial rioting first erupted June 16 to 17, with police saying there have been more than a million blacks outside Johannesburg.

In the eastern coastal city of Durban, 500 black bus drivers were reported to have returned to work after being told their strike, which had crippled the city, would end. The drivers were demanding higher pay.

By night another man was reported killed, but some housebound workers held themselves to their eyes to counter lingering traces of gas.

In her own words, Ruth says, "have the greatest integrity in life. Politicians may fail you, friends may let you down, but you can always depend on your conscience. They may not always accept what you want to be." Ruth Houk, the person with a passion for drawing, uses a variety of techniques to bring her characters to life on paper. The Wolfpack also has a favorable schedule, playing both Maryland and Duke at home. Wolf Pack is juggling its hopes on John Slepkin, the conference leader as an all-purpose runner last year.

North Carolina has 17 returning starters, including tailback Mike Vavasour, who is better than 1,200 yards last year. But Tar Heel coach Bill Dooley hasn’t assorted on a quarterback. About five players are under consideration.

Clemmson, 2-9 last year, has two quarterbacks in Mark O’Cain and Steve Fullmer. The running attack will be led by sophomores Harold Goggin and Junior Thomas Blay.
