HENRY HOWARD AT HOME.

The morning opened in a most promising manner for the successful conclusion of the American triumph at the hands of the English actor. Mr. Irving, as always, was in the highest spirits, and his presence was regarded with the same interest by his friends as it would have been by his enemies. The house was crowded with people, and the air was thick with the scent of flowers. As the sun rose higher, the crowd grew larger, and the sound of music filled the air. At last, the moment arrived, and the actor stepped forward to receive the applause of his audience. The cheers were heard throughout the house, and the actors were cheered with all the enthusiasm of which they were capable. The performance was a perfect success, and the audience was much pleased with the way in which the actors carried out their parts. The evening ended with a dinner at the hotel, and the actors were much pleased with the way in which their friends received them. The evening was spent in social gatherings, and the actors were much pleased with the way in which they were received.
