Mr. Bonner, head of the New York Evening Mercury and then on the Hartford Courant, then for many years with the Hartford Press and the New York Era, has been in the habit of writing in a very familiar and popular style, and his papers are always full of interesting information. His manner is characteristic of the New York Evening Mercury, and he is known to the public as a contributor to that paper. His articles are usually short and to the point, and he is always careful to make his point clear. His style is simple and direct, and his ideas are always well expressed.
