HMCS Regina, together with Republic Singapore Ship Intrepid, provided assistance to a stricken dhow in the Gulf of Aden on Sept. 18. “RSS Intrepid’s Sikorsky helicopter sighted a Yemeni dhow, whose crew were waving their hands, indicating some form of distress,” said Lt(N) Jolene Lisi, Regina’s Operations Room Officer. “With that information, Regina’s Sea King helicopter located the dhow and provided further visual assessment. It then remained overhead until Regina arrived. As the closest vessel, the Canadian frigate was able to arrive and begin offering assistance within 30 minutes.” Regina sent members of their small boat inspection team, an electrician and an interpreter in their rigid-hulled-inflatable boat to investigate and provide assistance. The dhow in distress had run out of both fuel and food. Regina was able to manoeuvre and secure the dhow alongside to provide fuel along with fresh food and water for the crew.

Election For The Payment In Lieu of Canadian Forces Severance Pay
Director General Compensations and Benefits, Chief of Military Personnel

The time to make a decision about your Canadian Forces Severance Pay (CFSP) is fast approaching.

Estimates of years of eligible service for the Payment in Lieu (PiL) of CFSP were mailed to the same address at which you receive your T4. If you did not receive your estimate, or if you believe there is an error, you may need to confirm/correct the information on your estimate with your Base or Unit Orderly Room.

If you think you might want to elect for a PiL, any uncorrected errors may affect the amount.

During the election period, from Dec. 14, 2012, to March 13, 2013, you have an opportunity to elect to receive all or part of your severance pay as a PiL. This election period is established by Treasury Board and cannot be extended for any reason. There are three options available with respect to your election as detailed below.

1. one time payment in full now
2. partial payment now and remainder at retirement
3. no election, receive all at retirement

You may choose, during the election period, to receive a PiL of all your accumulated years of eligible service prior to your release or transfer from the Regular Force or the Primary Reserve. Your PiL will be processed following a verification of eligible service by the PiL Audit Team.

Alternatively, you may also choose, during the election period, to receive a PiL for a portion of your accumulated years of eligible service. Under certain circumstances, Base or Unit Orderly Rooms will be able to process payments directly in the pay system. Otherwise, payments will be processed following a verification of eligible service by the PiL Audit team.

When you release or transfer from the Regular Force or the Primary Reserve, if eligible, you will receive a CFSP benefit for the remaining portion calculated at your rate of pay for your substantive rank at that time.

Any PiL of CFSP is considered Employment Income under the Income Tax Act and is taxable. If you have unused RRSP room, you can request a reduction of income tax at source. Please consult the Canada Revenue Agency or Revenu Quebec for further details.

The third option is to choose not to receive a PiL and when your release or transfer from the Regular Force or the Primary Reserve, if eligible, you will receive a CFSP benefit for all the years of accumulated eligible service calculated at the rate of pay for your substantive rank at that time.

Whatever you decide, make sure you have all the facts. You are strongly recommended to talk to a professional advisor who can help you understand the financial, tax and other implications of your decision.

Body scans and future military

Last week, the upper level of the Naden Gym took on the look and feel of a scientific research lab. Dressed in blue robes, 180 CFB Esquimalt members had lines and x’s drawn on them before they were measured and guided behind curtains where three-dimensional lasers mapped out images of their bodies.

It looked like a scene from a sci-fi movie.

This was part of the 2012 Canadian Forces Anthropometric Survey, a Canadian Forces wide study involving 15 bases and wings.

The study is being conducted for the Canadian Forces by Defence Research and Development Canada, an agency that provides DND, other government departments and the public safety and national security communities with the knowledge and technologies needed to defend and protect Canada’s interests at home and abroad.

“This is the first time the Canadian Forces have done a study like this involving navy, army and air force,” said Allan Keefe, project lead from Defence Research and Development Canada (DRDC).

Current clothing and workspace standards are based on an army survey conducted in 1997, and there was evidence to suggest the survey needed to be updated, he says.

“Knowledge of the size and form of the body of Canadian Forces personnel is crucial to properly specify, evaluate, and develop military equipment and individual clothing,” said Keefe.

“We are taking a proportionate sampling approach to ensure we have proper representation of gender, occupation, age and language. This allows us to get a non-bias snapshot of the body shape and size of the Canadian Forces population today.”

Once all the data is analyzed it will be used for understanding how many of each size of clothing to buy, and improving fit and performance of equipment.

For the survey, participants began the process at an intake desk where they provided voluntary demographic information such as age, occupation and ethnicity. Then they proceeded to landmarking stations where important anatomical features were marked.

“This is done to aid the technicians in identifying key measurement locations on the body,” explained Keefe. “They are measured with measuring tape, calipers and anthropometers to provide us with body size info.”

Three dimensional scanners were then used to render accurate images of the participant’s head, hands, feet and full body.

About 40 military members participated in the study each workday at the Naden Athletic Centre last week.

Upon completion of the process, each participant received a certificate with an image of their body rendered by the 3D scanner.

The members who participated in the survey see the benefit in it, said Keefe. “They are curious as to when they will see the results of the data in new design of kit.”

“This study is being led by DRDC with assistance from Human Systems Inc., and will assess 4,000 members across Canada.”

OS Scott Hickey, marine systems engineer student from the Fleet School, volunteered to take part in the 2012 Canadian Forces Anthropometric Survey. Jon Stevens in the landmarking station measures his critical body features and marks them with an eyebrow pencil so the points can be easily and accurately measured at other stations. This is the first time a survey has ever been conducted across the Canadian Forces to establish data on the size and shape of military members.

Drop Zone fundraiser worthy experience

I am so proud to be a part of the group that participated in The Drop Zone this year. I know that the more than $140,000 raised will make a huge difference for the Easter Seals organization, and the children that benefit from it.

So many people think of Easter Seals as the charity that sends out stickers and never ventures beyond that. Once you dive deeper in the organization and realize just how much of a difference they make for kids and their families, it’s beyond heart-warming.

In Oak Bay, there is the Easter Seals House that provides a low cost home away from home for families that are in Victoria for medical treatment. Up in Shawnigan Lake there is also Camp Shawnigan, Vancouver Island’s accessible camp. Children aged six to 18 with a mental and/or physical disability may attend camp for free thanks to the fundraising efforts of Easter Seals and the BC Lions Society.

Before The Drop Zone, I never realized just how much Easter Seals does as an organization. I hadn’t even heard of this event until I happened across it in a Google search, and after further research I knew it was something I wanted to do. I joined the fundraiser fairly late in the game, registering on Aug. 20 with less than a month until the deadline. Next year I plan to start earlier and hopefully surpass the money I raised this year.

I could not have reached and passed my goal in 2012 without the help of my family and friends. Many of the donations would not have happened if it weren’t for my mother. She was relentless in canvassing our neighbours in Ontario, updating them on my life in B.C. and then asking for a donation. She posted my donation link more times than I want to count on her Facebook page, resulting in donations from friends of hers across the planet. Many of my friends and family members donated as well, some in the interest of laughing at the video footage of my panicked descent, but all with the intent of making a difference.

My boss and co-workers have been supportive, not only by donating but also by listening to my rambling about costume concepts and sewing night after night, different fundraising ideas, excited updates on progress...they’ve been amazing.

I also owe a huge thank you to the Pacific Fleet Club Junior Ranks Mess. Devin submitted the request for a donation on my behalf, and then this is a perfect example of how kind-hearted they are. It truly is an excellent cause, and I could not have done this without them. Their incredibly generous donation is the one that pushed me past my goal, and I can’t thank them enough.

Never in my life did I think I would willingly jump off the top of a 13 storey office building. I’m fine with heights if I am safely inside a building or on a balcony, but anything more open has always terrified me. I spent a good five minutes working my way off the ledge and once I had done that, it was suddenly less scary. The fact that I successfully rappelled down the CIBC building just goes to show that, with proper motivation, I’m capable of overcoming my fears. I don’t think I could’ve done this just for fun, but for the kids. Absolutely, they’re worth it.

Standing on the edge of the CIBC building in downtown Victoria, OS Dallas Sheers felt no fear. OS Sheers also took part in the 2012 Easter Seals Drop Zone, a fund raising event that has participants rappel down the 13-story building.

“I found that actually going down the side of a building isn’t that scary,” says OS Sheers. “It ended up being a lot of fun.”

More than 40 people took part in the event this year, raising a total of $140,000, with OS Sheers raising $1,300.

Proceeds from the event went to support Easter Seals Camp Shawnigan, a summer camp for children with disabilities.

“The community really came out and showed their support,” says OS Sheers. “I think people are starting to realize they can make a real difference in the lives of these kids by contributing.”

OS Sheers say people have begun to change the way they think when it comes to contributing; it can be interactive.

“There’s a difference between putting a toonie in a jar and going out and doing it,” says OS Sheers. “I think people want to take that hands-on approach to making a difference and it shows with how the event is growing. I’ve already had two other people approach me about doing it themselves.”

Having exceeded his goal this year, OS Sheers plans to double it next year.

“Thanks to the support from the Fleet and the Lookout, I raised a lot more than I thought I would,” says OS Sheers. “It’s a great cause and a fun time. I’m definitely doing it next year.”

OCTOBER: WOMEN’S HISTORY MONTH

Strong Girls, Strong Canada: Leaders from the Start

Megan Gerryts
Workforce Planning Assistant

Starting in 1992 Canada declared October to be Women’s History Month – corresponding with Persons Day on Oct. 18.

On that day in 1929 the “Famous Five” won the constitutional court case determining that women could be classified as “Persons”, thereby, making them eligible to sit in the Senate. The theme for the 2012 Women’s History Month is “Strong Girls, Strong Canada: Leaders from the Start.” This theme recognizes the vital role women in leadership have played in Canadian history: from girl guides to hockey players, from entrepreneurs to community organizers. Having strong women in leadership is a key ingredient in creating stronger Canadian communities.

Oct. 11 will be the first “International Day of the Girl.” This day aims to make a difference in the lives of girls and young women as citizens and powerful voices of change within their families, their communities and their nations. The Government of Canada led the international community in establishing this day.

There are many aspects of Canadian girls to celebrate: according to the latest Statistics Canada Report, Canadian girls are more likely than Canadian boys to earn their high school diploma. Since the early 1990s women have made up the majority of students enrolled in undergraduate university programs.

While significant progress has been made since the “Persons” case, reports such as Statistics Canada show us what areas need to be improved upon. For example, in 2005 young women aged 25 to 29 with full-year, full-time work were earning 85 cents for each dollar earned by their male counterparts. Women’s History Month enables us to celebrate how far Canada has come in achieving equality for women, and also helps us to recognize the areas that need to be improved in the coming years.

Women’s History Month is brought to you by the Defence Women’s Advisory Organization. The mission of the DWAO is to provide insight to the DND/CF leadership on systemic issues that could affect Employment Equity (EE) groups, and to advise on the development and implementation of EE programs and policies. DWAO works to progress the cultural evolution of the organization in support of achieving a successful diverse workforce. The DWAO is open to all DND/CF women. Please contact Marie Ormiston, A/EE & Aboriginal Liaison Officer, at 363-7669 for more information or visit http://esquimalt.mil.ca/ee.

Cadets take on Iceland terrain

Capt Tyrone Grande
RCSU (Atlantic) PA

Seventeen Royal Canadian Army Cadets and three Cadet Instructor Cadre Officers from across Canada participated in a rigorous International Expedition in Iceland from Aug. 24 to Sept. 6, which tested their physical and mental limitations.

The itinerary included a self-sufficient and gruelling 10-day hiking and mountain climbing expedition through Iceland’s south-western region, followed by three days of equally challenging mountain biking.

Participants ascended 1,000 metres of altitude and higher, through technical terrain, rivers, and mountains, each one carrying a rucksack of 50 lbs. “The itinerary was very challenging, even for an experienced adventure enthusiast to attempt,” said mountain guide Vidar. “When I first heard that I was to do this with a group of teenagers, I thought this is crazy.”

On day seven of the expedition, the group’s mountain guides were alerted to an approaching storm that could bring dangerously high winds and sub-zero temperatures. “It was really tough,” recalls cadet Matthew Wickwire, 18, from Halifax, NS, a member of 2501 1st Halifax-Dartmouth Field Regiment Army Cadet Corps. “After seven days of hiking and climbing through all types of weather and nearing the end of the expedition, the guides told us that we were going to have a long day tomorrow, a really long day.”

Due to the potential of a heavy storm, they couldn’t take the chance of being caught in high altitude, so they had no choice but to get out of there fast.

On day eight of their expedition, cadets, staff, and guides woke at 4 a.m. to the daunting task of crossing the Skeioararjokull glacier, the third largest glacier in the world, which would lead them to safety at the Skaftafell National Park. After 13.5 hours winding across glacial crevices and ice, the group finally arrived at their objective in a total hiking time of 17 hours. “Crossing the glacier was so challenging but we did it,” rejoiced cadet Shawn McEachern, 18, from Nanaimo, B.C., a member of 2422 Canadian Scottish Regiment (Nanaimo) Army Cadet Corps. “I was so tired during one of the breaks, but Captain Gale and the other staff started handing out chocolate bars and I just started to smile.”

After experiencing the adversities of high altitude, frigid cold river crossings, sub-zero temperatures and living in tents for 10 days, the group went on to traverse approximately 200 kilometres on mountain bike trails before enjoying a cultural day in the capital city of Reykjavik.

“International expeditions like these are held to reward exemplary, senior cadets from across Canada, and to test the years of preparation and survival skills they’ve been taught throughout the program,” says Captain Adam Gale, the Officer In Charge of the Regional Cadet Land Training School and this year’s International Expedition. “Selected cadets must prove their ability in a number of qualifiers prior to being considered to undertake an International Expedition. This was one of the toughest and most capable groups we’ve ever had, and I’m so proud of them.”

MS Hart and I were both selected to represent Maritime Forces Pacific (MARPAC) at the 70th Anniversary of the raid in Dieppe, France. We flew into Trenton and had two full days of parade practice before departing for France. One the first day we practiced individual drill movements. The second day we trained with the contingent of 107 individuals from all three elements on the five different parade scenarios.

A military Airbus took us from Trenton to Ottawa where we picked up veterans who participated in the raid. Those veterans were 92 to 95 years young and came from Montreal to Vancouver. Then we flew to Lille, in northern France, where two buses drove us the three hours to Dieppe. Once in Dieppe, we were given our hotel room, which we shared with two or three roommates. The next morning, the contingent was driven to the three beaches where the raid took place. A Canadian historian talked to us about what went on that day. I visualized what the soldiers saw once they landed on the beach.

We were also driven to the furthest point inland where the Allies marched to. Following this tour, we went to a theatre and saw the world premiere of “Dieppe Uncovered”. The declassification of documents led to this documentary, after 15 years of research by military historian David O’Keefe.

One of the main British spies featured in the documentary was present in the audience. That night, we went to Les Vertus Canadian Cemetery where we had a chance to browse for an hour to pay respect to our fallen comrades before the official ceremony took place. To commemorate this event, MS Hart placed a Bos’n call in front of a navy man’s grave.

As the ceremony progressed, the fog rolled in and we could feel a presence in the air. The Canadian Command team were part of the sixth and final guards. We marched in front of the main cenotaph and stood at attention with our heads bowed down to reflect on all the servicemen who made the ultimate sacrifice for humanity.

The next two days were the main reasons why we trained in Trenton. The contingent performed two parades per day with weather ranging from 34-36°C. The Square du Canada parade was the longest, where the Vigil party stayed in position for two hours and 20 minutes. During this ceremony, there was a fly over by a Second World War airplane and flashing lights from a Royal Navy ship HMS Charger sending “WE WILL REMEMBER THEM” in Morse code to shore.

Once the main ceremony was over, the Guard of Honour left the Square du Canada and marched past three memorials along the Esplanade. They paid respect to the Fusilliers du Mont-Royal, the Essex Scottish Regiment and the Royal Hamilton Light Infantry monuments.

Following this, we were invited by the City of Dieppe for lunch. We then proceeded to Puys for a wreath-laying and unveiling of commemorative plaque.

The highlight of this parade was the release of hundreds of pigeons to remember the fallen. After a well deserve rest and a bit of jetlag, we woke up early and drove to Pourville-sur-mer for a Ceremony of Remembrance. The Vigil party stayed still for more than one hour and 40 minutes. Two bronze statues were revealed showing two hands on a rifle at the position of “rest on your arms reverse.”

Following this we drove back to Dieppe for a wreath-laying ceremony at Memorial des Marins. During the ceremony, MS Hart piped the “still” and piped a “carry on.”

Once all parades were finished, as a thank you from the Governor General, we were bussed to a very nice restaurant for a French meal and had a last chance to mingle with him and the Canadian veterans.

Overall, this was an experience of a lifetime that I am very grateful to be part of. I have visited a part of the world where Canadians are still remembered as heroes 70 years after a significant event for our country. Seeing the vitality of all veterans made me extremely proud to represent them, my country and my service.

One day only October 13, 2012!
When Rhys Watson was born on April 3, 2000, the first thing his father Sandy thought was, “A boy! A rugby player!”

Moments later, his plans were dashed as the doctor confirmed what the Watsons had suspected: their baby boy had hemophilia. It was at a family gathering a few months earlier that Sandy, a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Primary Reserves with the Canadian Army Command and Staff College, first suspected his wife, Sonia, may be a carrier of the rare bleeding disorder, after learning hemophilia ran in her family. The couple soon met with a geneticist who told them that if they had a son, he had a one-in-two chance of being born with hemophilia.

“At the time, I felt disbelief and I feared the unknown,” Sandy says. “I had a lot of misconceptions about hemophilia and I certainly had a lot of growing up to do.”

Hemophilia is a genetic disorder that prevents blood from clotting normally. People with hemophilia do not necessarily bleed more or faster than other people, but will bleed for a longer period. Internal bleeding is particularly serious and can be life threatening.

Sonia is one of approximately 300,000 Canadians who are carriers of a genetic bleeding disorder. Rhys is one of 30,000 requiring treatment for conditions such as hemophilia and von Willebrand disease. While hemophilia mainly affects males, von Willebrand disease affects both men and women.

Luckily, the guidance the Watsons needed came to them at the hospital in the form of a blue canvas bag that said It’s a boy! filled with information and a list of services provided by the Canadian Hemophilia Society.

The Watsons began participating in local meetings where they met other parents of children with bleeding disorders. Seeing and learning from others living healthy, ‘normal’ lives helped the most, says Sandy.

“I remember at one of my first network meetings a young boy sat beside me with his knuckles all chewed up and scrapes all over,” he says. “I could see that nothing was holding him back, and I knew then that Rhys was going to be just fine.”

The programs have benefitted Rhys as well. At eight-years-old, Rhys learned to infuse himself with factor VIII concentrate, a synthetic medication that temporarily corrects his bleeding problem. Self-infusion is an empowering skill he learned from his peers at a camp for children living with a bleeding disorder.

“Fifty years ago people with hemophilia could expect only pain, crippling and death at a young age,” says Diane Cuming, President of the Nova Scotia Chapter of the Canadian Hemophilia Society. “Today, thanks to advances in treatment and care, children like Rhys have the opportunity to live full, productive and active lives.”

The Canadian Hemophilia Society is one of 16 health charities that benefits from donations by public servants during the Government of Canada Workplace Charitable Campaign, which launched in September.

“Thousands of Canadian families like the Watsons have been helped thanks to payroll donations to Healthpartners by Government of Canada employees,” said Joe McCabe, Regional Manager Atlantic Canada, Healthpartners. “Together we have raised $80 million to find cures, build awareness and run local support programs for people facing critical illnesses and their families.”

Starting with that little blue bag, the Watsons say they have benefited tremendously from services provided by the Canadian Hemophilia Society, including peer-to-peer counseling and weekend family retreats.

Both Sandy and Sonia have dedicated hundreds of hours to the cause, serving as president and treasurer of their local chapter, and as parent counselors and fundraising volunteers. They have attended national and international conferences and brought back valuable insights to share locally.

Their dedication hasn’t gone unnoticed. Sonia and Sandy have been recognized for their volunteerism with provincial and local awards. While he may not be roughhousing on a rugby field, Rhys leads “a very normal life,” which includes martial arts, cadets, soccer and running. Sandy attributes this in part to the treatment he’s received at the bleeding disorder clinic at the IWK Health Centre in Halifax, along with ongoing support from the Canadian Hemophilia Society.

“There are a lot of people living with or supporting others with diseases that may not be readily apparent to the average person,” Watson says. “Without services from the Canadian Hemophilia Society, people like us would feel isolated and face more issues. They help people chart the course, so we can all benefit from a healthy and prosperous community.”

During this fall’s Government of Canada Workplace Charitable Campaign, choose health and make a donation to Healthpartners to support the Canadian Hemophilia Society and 15 other trusted Canadian health charities.

Thirty Regular and Reserve Force members are currently engaged in the final training and testing phase of their primary leadership qualification (PLQ) course at Rocky Point’s Forward Operation Base (FOB).

“The PLQ course is the toughest leadership course in the CF, and anyone who wants to move through the ranks to Master Corporal or Master Seaman must take this course,” says CPO1 Stephane Lesperance, PLQ Chief.

Working up to 16 hours a day during the seven-week course, students must do physical fitness, drill, ruck-sack marches, kit inspection and write exams on the curriculum each day. “It’s demanding mentally, physically and emotionally,” says CPO1 Lesperance. “This is the final stage of their course where everything they have learned comes together and they are tested on it. We have taught them the basic foundation of leadership principles and they are now applying what they have learned in the field at the FOB.”

The FOB is used as their camp for two weeks. It is set up to resemble FOB’s built in Afghanistan and other countries, similar to what students would encounter during deployments.

Nine institutions teach the PLQ course across the CF and each has a FOB attached to it for realistic training. At Rocky Point, 11 staff are teaching and testing the 30 candidates. Students are given scenarios based on real life operations. “They must lead their section through scenarios like roadblocks, bomb threats, suspected drug smuggling or terrorist activities,” says CPO1 Lesperance. “Can the leader think on his or her feet? Report to command and modify the mission based on a changing environment? This is what the instructors are looking for.”

An opposition force is played by actors in civilian clothing who are military members on loan to the course. “We also use veterans from the Canadian Scottish Regiment because they know the tactics and scenarios from their experiences deployed to places like Bosnia and Afghanistan. For many of the vets this is a rewarding experience because they reinforce the skills they have learned and pass on the tactics and scenarios to members who have less experience.”

The first week at Rocky Point students are randomly assigned to lead their sections and are assessed on tasks while receiving continual feedback from PLQ instructors. During the second week of the course they are given scenarios and tested on them. “It is tough,” says HMCS Discovery reservist, LS David MacPherson. “It involves constant stress to mimic the difficult situations leaders encounter. It is long hours, lots of testing and lots of rules.”

The principles students learn in this course are used in everyday life, says said CPO1 Lesperance. “They will use them with their families, or in a business setting. When they are given tasks, they will be completed on time, and they will meet the expectations, timing and quality control,” he adds.

What is Army Reserve Recognition Day? On Oct. 3, the Canadian Army will hold the first Army Reserve Recognition Day. This day provides an opportunity to recognize and highlight the Army Reserve’s important contributions and operational successes.

Army Reserve Recognition Day and You
To celebrate this day, Army Reservists are encouraged to wear their uniforms at work or school. On Oct. 3, you might be surprised to learn that friends, neighbours and colleagues are Reservists. Take a moment to thank and congratulate them for their role in the Canadian Army, and ask if you can take a photo with them!

Be sure to get their permission to share the photo with the Canadian Army on Facebook or Twitter.

Why celebrate Reservists?
The contribution of the Army Reserve over the past 10 years is unprecedented, particularly to the mission in Afghanistan. Army Reservists serve the Canadian Army with dedication, all the while remaining active in their home towns and their civilian jobs.

Spread across the country, Army Reservists work in more than 100 communities and are the Canadian Army’s most direct link with Canadians. Army Reservists are proud to serve and live in their community, and their pride will be on display on October 3.

Why October 3?
Oct. 3 is a significant date in the history of the Army Reserve. It was on this date in 1914 that the 1st Canadian Division sailed from the Gaspé, Quebec en route to Europe at the start of the First World War. The Canadian contingent was a volunteer force and many of today’s Army Reserve units have strong historical ties to the units of the 1st Canadian Division.
One of the reasons MCpl Decheng Su joined the Canadian Forces was because the "military take care of family."

When he and his family came to British Columbia from Nova Scotia in May of 2009, he contacted the Esquimalt Military Family Resource Centre (MFRC) to get help for his two autistic daughters.

"It was hard for the family," said MCpl Decheng on living in a new community. "We don't have any connections here."

There were many challenges for the Su family. Having moved to Canada in 1996, they didn't have the support system in place of family or friends. English wasn't MCpl Decheng or his wife Xiaoting's first language. Not only were they new to CFB Esquimalt, MCpl Decheng had a six-month tasking with HMCS Brandon and a nine-month course in Borden in the first two years. They also had the added challenge of raising two autistic children that required a high amount of care and attention.

His wife needed to be able to have a break from parenting and it was complicated system to set up care for special needs children. The staff at the MFRC helped them to navigate the complex system of acquiring respite care.

The Ministry of Children and Family Development offer funding to eligible families for purchasing respite care. However, funding is not always available immediately upon request and there may be long wait-lists. In this case, staff at the MFRC determined that the wait time would be approximately one year before the Su family could access respite care from the ministry.

MFRC staff helped the family with an application to the Military Families Fund for respite care funding. They got funding approved for their first year at CFB Esquimalt and it was a lifesaver for the family. It took continued advocacy from MFRC staff with the ministry to finally get them approved for respite care in the following year. The end result was exactly what the family wanted: four hours per week of respite care for each child.

"The MFRC was a great help," said MCpl Decheng. "It's great to have the MFRC, if we didn't have them then I wouldn't be able to do my job."

In the case of the Su family, this also meant that staff at the MFRC made sure that supports were set up at school, that resources from the Cridge Centre for the Family were accessed to help develop a plan to administer the funds, and that the family followed the correct procedures when it came to the funding.

The Esquimalt MFRC has a dedicated staff member that works within a team of counsellors and social workers to help set up supports for families. Colleen Cahoon has been in the role of Family Navigator Coordinator for the past three years and is that glad that she could help Decheng "do his job and be operationally ready."

The MFRC is the only local non-profit organization specifically dedicated to provide services to military families. Help support key services by contributing to the MFRC through the Government of Canada Workplace Charitable Campaign (GCWCC). On Section 4 of the pledge form, write Esquimalt Military Family Resource Centre and include the charitable number 13807 0578 RR0001.

Managing debt, options available

Blair Greenwood

Are you using credit to survive? Do you have trouble paying your bills? Are creditors calling you? Is your debt accumulating? Do you see no end to paying off your debt?

Did you know that even on a credit card debt of $2,500, making only the minimum payment each month will take you over 20 years to pay the debt off completely?

Owing money you cannot afford to repay can be very scary. You can get your life back to normal, but you need to understand your options.

Many believe bankruptcy to be their only choice. Depending on your personal financial situation there are a number of other options available that should be considered. Exploring the bankruptcy process is important, but it is equally as important to understand all the options available to you and how they will affect any assets you may have such as a home, car, savings, and/or RRSP’s, in order to make an informed decision. Below is an overview of some of these options:

A Debt Consolidation Loan is a personal loan that allows you to consolidate many other debts into one monthly payment. It may give you the convenience of having only one monthly payment, but if that payment is still beyond your means then this will not improve your situation.

A Consumer Proposal is when you offer to pay your creditors a percentage of what you owe them over a specific period of time. Generally, you would make monthly payments to a Trustee in Bankruptcy, and the Trustee will use that money to pay each of your creditors. The amount you pay depends on your personal situation and the amount of money you make. The payment plan is interest free and, if properly structured, allows you to pay back the debt on your terms.

Credit Counseling is a service which can help you place your financial affairs under control. It is also known as debt counseling or consumer credit counseling. If you cannot solve your money problems by budgeting or by debt consolidation, then debt negotiation and settlement with your creditors through a Debt Management Plan may be right for you. The idea behind a Debt Management Plan is this: You can afford to make a monthly payment. You just need some help negotiating with your creditors, and a little breathing space to get back on top of things. A Debt Management Plan is a voluntary agreement between you and your creditors, arranged by a credit counselor and paid back over a maximum of 60 months. You will usually repay all of your debt and interest usually continues to be charged.

Bankruptcy is a legal process, regulated by the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, by which you may be discharged from most of your debts. The purpose of the Act is to permit an honest, but unfortunate, debtor to obtain a discharge from his or her debts, subject to reasonable conditions. When you declare bankruptcy, your non-exempt property is given to a trustee in bankruptcy who then sells it and distributes the money among your creditors. Your unsecured creditors will not be able to take legal steps to recover their debts from you (such as seizing property or garnishing wages). Once you are legally bankrupt, you are required to perform the duties of bankrupts before you can be discharged from Bankruptcy. You will be in Bankruptcy a minimum of 9 months and a maximum of 21 months, in addition to your non-exempt property being liquidated to pay your creditors you may be required to make monthly surplus income payments depending on your income. Any decision you make is a huge decision and can often be clouded by emotions and the stress of your current situation. When considering the above options it is important to get advice from someone who is independent and there to represent your interests, and help you make a decision based on what is right for you - not your creditors.

Owing money you cannot afford to repay can be very scary. You can get your life back to normal, but you need to understand your options.
