

Miss Hayward had very good news to-day; and yesterday too, it was much better, though I am afraid I forgot to mention it in my Journal.

Mrs. Lindsey is said to be quite out of danger. What a happy day for dear Hasie, and how happy she looked,—happy even while the tears were streaming down her cheeks, for she cried more this morning from joy, than she had done all the day before from sorrow.

I asked her how she was, and she gave me, I think, a strange answer. She had felt, she said, that she deserved punishment, and therefore was afraid to murmur, or even to ask God to turn it from her; but that she knew that she was not worthy of the great mercy He had shown her, and feared so much that she
