

I think that was the first thing made me remember Miss Hayward's advice, and then I did pray to God to help me to decide, Mamma; but whilst I was saying my prayer, I fell sound asleep, and forgot all about my difficulties, till very early this morning, when Jane knocked at my door, as I had asked her. And I don't even yet understand how it was. You know I am generally very lazy when I am called in the morning. But to-day, before almost I had heard the knock, I was standing in the middle of the floor, and while my eyes were still close shut, I was saying, "Yes, it is quite time to be up, if we are to go to the cottages to-day."

I felt quite happy in a minute, for it seemed as if it had been decided without my knowing
