

Then she made a neat little mattress of wadding, and hemmed cambric muslin sheets, and coverlid, with blankets and pillows, all complete, not forgetting pale blue curtains, that were fastened on so neatly with gum, and then, when all was ready, she put into it one of the very tiny wax dolls that we get for a half-penny, and put a night-cap on, and little small frills round the hands, and every thing so neat, that I thought, Mamma, if you had been here, you would have liked to have put it under a little glass case, and to have kept it for yourself, only that it would have been a shame to disappoint poor little Susan, when she is so good.