

trying to rise, removed others to the side of the road, and stepped over the rest with such care and gentleness, that not one person was hurt.

TWENTIETH DAY.

Miss Hayward has not been at all well to-day. She would not go to church with me this morning, and cannot read to me to-night. She has been obliged to go to bed: so I am alone in the school-room; and, as I am tired of reading all day to myself alone, I will write a little in my Journal; but am
