

for you. This much he said, he would put into the garden all the plants in the flower-pits, and after filling your beds and baskets as full as they can be, he has enough over to fill Amy's too. So now she will have geraniums, verbenas, and salvias, and two of the dear little tiny, tiny roses you are so fond of, and a great many other things beside. You cannot think, Mamma, how happy I have been making that garden, and Miss Hayward has always been so good and so kind about it, helping me to work; or, if there was not enough for both of us, or if she was tired, then she used to sit down beside me, and talk about the flowers, and where they all came from, and not only this, but she would tell me the most wonderful things out of her wonderful head. I do hope,
