

Africa there is another tree, that gives butter, that looks and tastes exactly the same as what we get out of the churn; and another, I think it is in Africa too, but am not quite sure, where if you make a hole in the trunk water gushes out like a fountain, so clear, and pure, and delicious, that the woodmen, when they go to work in the forest, where there are no streams or springs, never think of taking water with them, quite sure that their friendly tree will give them plenty, more fresh and cool than it could be if carried from their own home.
