J: No, I believe, no, it's been about, about two weeks.

D: Well, what are some of the interesting stories that you remember in your childhood days and things that you probably never will forget that you think about a lot today?

J: Well, I remember picking cotton with my daddy, Henry Barry's brother.

D: Oh, yes, Mr. Patrick.

J: Yes, Patrick Lowry.

D: Uh huh, well, now you were only seven when he died, do you, can you just barely remember picking that cotton?

J: I can remember picking that cotton with him as good as I can remember, better than I can remember some things today.

D: Yes, well, that was, that was certainly a long, long time ago.

J: A long time.

D: Picking cotton was a hard job. I used to do some of it myself. Of course today the machines are taking care of it.

J: Yes, and I can remember when he got to where he couldn't get out in the field and pick he'd have us to pull off the knotty bowls and fetch them to the porch, pour them down and he'd sit there and pick out them knotty bowls.

D: I see. Now after Mr. Patrick died you, did you continue working on the farm?

J: I worked on the farm all my days till I got disabled to work.

D: When did you first move to this location where this house is located?

J: Let me see now if I can remember that. I was just trying to study.
