J: Oh Lord, I can't remember everything. I'm too, too old to remember everything.

D: What was life like during your, well, when you and Mr. Jacobs were courting before you married, what would you do for entertainment?

J: Worked on the farm.

D: And when he come to see you would you take a trip, would you go anywhere or would you stick around the house?

J: No, Mama wouldn't let me go with him nowhere. See, there weren't no cars back then.

D: Yes.

J: And she didn't want me to have him.

D: Well, you just mostly sat around the house and...

J: Yes.

D: ...talked and so forth and that was the biggest thing that you did.

J: Yes.

D: Was Pembroke, what was Pembroke like during your early days?

J: Well, I can remember about two stores, I reckon, in Pembroke back when I was young and I can remember Lumberton. It was a, just a small place.

D: Some of the people used to walk to Fayetteville before your time. Did you ever hear of those stories, walking to Fayetteville for groceries?

J: Yes, the old man, Bill Jacob's wife, last wife, said they asked the bunch up and walked to Fayetteville to get some bread.

D: I see, well, it certainly must have been tough times. Well, do you know something else you'd like to say?
