

that awaken thee to life, transforming the soulless crag into the just proportions of angelic beauty; softening the harsh outlines; polishing the rough surfaces; bringing all things in subjection to the harmony of his will.

As clay in the hands of the potter, so art thou in the hands of thy master. Exult in the brief adversity, if he be a Phidias fashioning thee to be a god.

