

“Yes, Reggie.”

“Well, then, do you not think Christ says to us at this time, ‘A new commandment give I unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another?’”

“Yes, Reggie.”

“And do you think you can have a truly happy Christmas, if you do not forgive Arthur the wrong you seem to think he has done you, though for my own part I think you are unjust, for surely Arthur had as good a right to try for the prize as you had?”

“Well, now, I never thought of that, I suppose he had; but, Reggie, he is such a dolt.”

“I did not find him so,” said Reginald. “I liked him very much. Now, Ernest, supposing you were to go and see him to-morrow.”

“I will,” said Ernest heartily, “I will, Reggie, for the sake of Christmas ‘good-will.’”