Kathleen Smith, a biologist with the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission (FWC), has been honored with the Florida Department of Environmental Protection’s Resource Manager of the Year award.

Smith’s work ethic and dedication might have been summarized last year when her housing was significantly damaged by Hurricane Irma.

“Kathleen possesses all the traits of an exemplary resource manager, including a strong work ethic, leadership ability, tremendous organizational and interpersonal skills, and dedication to going above and beyond her regular job duties,” said Kipp Frohlich, Director of the FWC’s Division of Habitat and Species Management. “We are so proud that she is being recognized for her great work and we are truly fortunate to have her on our FWC team.”

Smith’s work ethic and dedication might have been summarized last year when her housing was significantly damaged by Hurricane Irma.

“We salute her!”

Smith has shared 240,000 acres of timberland monitoring and permitting protocols for the rare native species. She also recognizes the CREW WEA as not just important for listed species but is a popular area as well. She has worked hard to maintain and protect those areas.

“It is abundantly clear that Kathleen accepts the position of the CREW WEA area biologist with the aim to expand its duties, and to greatly enhance the research, monitoring and restoration of the species and habitats that make CREW WEA such a unique treasure to the region,” said supervisor Daniel Mitchell, who nominated her for the award. “Kathleen’s impact on conservation goes beyond the footprint of CREW, as she has assisted in the area involving bears and panthers. She has a strong ability to communicate with the public and better engage the public, including its extra mile – like translating information into English and Creole languages to communicate better with Farm Workers Village residents in Immokalee on wildlife issues such as bear management.”

DeSantis, a Northeast Florida congressman, received $25,113, which raised his matching-fund total to $417,836.

This editorial first appeared in the Florida Times-Union from college head football coaches and more public accountability and transparency — which eventually led to the de-glazing allegations that too many coaches and broadcasters have felt free to play players being routinely humiliated, cussed at and physically abused by Maryland coaches.

Ohio State head coach Urban Meyer has been suspended for three games, while the university investigates accusations by the ex-wife of former OSU assistant Zach Smith that he and other members of Smith’s staff engaged in domestic violence against her — but took no action because Smith was a valuable staff member. An arrest report issued late Wednesday night details behavior by Meyer that act, including, Smith’s visit to a strip club on a Friday night and that Smith lied about recruiting trips he never took and slept with athletes in the facilities.

North Carolina head coach Larry Fedora raised eyebrows when he calmly dismissed the claims of academic scientific research that links football to chronic traumatic encephalopathy, a degenerative brain disease. Fedora suggested the research is part of some murky conspiracy to put football “under attack” — and even, Fadness featured, “cause our country (to go down), too.”

It’s time for us all to remember that at the start of the season of college football.

The syndrome of college football head coaches viewing themselves as all-powerful overlords is alive and well. But instead of conforming to the old adage about looking like a king outside the Earth rather than mortals who stroll the Earth, we still defend them, perhaps it’s time to chart a different course, a different direction for football.

We are all guilty of constructing thevisor — the mask created by the all-powerful overlords across campuses throughout America. We’re all guilty of the “ Trio. The Great Coach, the larger — the “I will dominate the world” — the “I will dominate the world” — the ” — the “I will dominate the world” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the ” — the “...

TALLAHASSEE — Leaving the Sunshine State’s limited train system in the dust, Florida’s gubernatorial wannabes are hopping on planes, buses and automobiles as they crisscross the peninsula making last-ditch attempts to garner votes in advance of Tuesday’s primary elections.

Former Congresswoman Gwen Graham, Tallahassee Mayor Andrew Gillum and former Miami Beach Mayor Philip Levine all made whistle stops in Tallahassee this week as part of their plans to capture the Democratic nomination for governor in a crowded primary that also includes Palm Beach billionaire Jeff Greene and Winter Park entrepreneur Chris King.

Rhea Stevens, 46, was among about 30 supporters who waited outside the Leon County courthouse Thursday morning for Graham and her husband, Stephen Hurm, to cast ballots.

Stevens brought along her 16-year-old daughter to cheer on the candidate they hope will become Florida’s first female governor.

"Her spirit. Her personality. She’s sincere. Very caring. And she’s humble," Stevens, who works as a domestic-violence counselor, said, when asked why she supports Graham. "She’s just real. And she’s a woman."

More than 150 miles away, 34-year-old Sondra Fetner cast her ballot at the Murray Hill branch of the Jacksonville Public Library.

Fetner, who lives in the upscale Avondale neighborhood, said she had registered as a voter with no party affiliation until 2016, when she registered as a Republican so she could vote in a heated race for state attorney.

But the mother of two said she switched her registration again this year, signing up as a Democrat so she could weigh in on Tuesday’s gubernatorial primary.

"It’s a really important race," Fetner told The News Service of Florida from the front seat of her SUV. "There was a really good line-up for the primaries. It was tough as." Faturen wouldn’t disclose which candidate won her vote, but said the choice was between "two good candidates instead of picking between two candidates I didn’t really like," referring to Agriculture Commissioner Adam Putnam and U.S. Rep. Ron DeSantis, the two Republicans duking it out to replace outgoing Gov. Rick Scott.

As the “establishment” candidate, Putnam had been considered a virtual shoo-in for the nomination—until DeSantis bagged the backing of President Donald Trump. Now, most polls show DeSantis leading the two-term Cabinet member in the Republican primary, but both candidates have made political career more than two decades ago in the Florida Legislature and also served in Congress.

Speaking to about 80 supporters Friday at a popular buffet-style restaurant, The Oaks, in Marianna, Putnam continued to press his case that, as a fifth-generation Floridian with roots in the cattle and citrus industries, he’s the best man to earn the GOP mantle for governor.

As proof, Putnam joked he’s the only candidate who knows how to properly pronounce Lafayette—"La-FAY-ette"—County.

Jackson County Commissioner Clint Pate said voters in the Panhandle community know Putnam because “he’s been here a bunch of times, he’s been around a long time and people like him, so he’s done a good job.”

Pate pointed out DeSantis “is getting a lot of coverage from Fox News.” Pate said his mother, like many other Republicans, is a fan of the conservative news network.

"My mother said, ‘I like that Ron DeSantis.’ When I pointed out that (DeSantis) is running against Adam, she said, ‘I don’t like him anymore,’ “ Pate told the News Service.

The candidates’ schedules in the final days leading up to the primaries would make even the heartiest Floridians wilt.

Putnam is headed to the GOP stronghold of The Villages on Saturday, followed by stops in Sanford and Temple Terrace before teaming up with Attorney General Pam Bondi for appearances in Jacksonville, Orlando and DeSantis is doing a six-city statewide blitz Monday, traveling to Jacksonville, Palm Harbor, Fort Myers, Miami, West Palm Beach and Daytona before heading to Orlando for an election-night gala.

Graham, who after voting Thursday headed south for a campaign event with singer Jimmy Buffett in Hollywood, spent Friday on a “workday” in Martin County alongside the Ocean Research and Conservation Association focused on the health effects of a toxic algae outbreak in the region.

“Florida is going to determine our future,” Graham told a clutch of reporters after casting her ballot in her hometown Thursday morning.

On Saturday, she’ll do a workday at Seven Bites Cafe in Orlando. The next morning, Graham will attend a service at an African-American church in Hillsborough County, followed by a work session at Open Cafe in Tampa.

On Monday, she’ll drive a 57-mile anti-DeSantis brigade to the Palm Beaches, before heading home to Tallahassee, where she and her husband, Rick, will vote on Election Day.

Between knocking on doors and making early voting stops in Miami-Dade County and Tallahassee, Graham said she’s shown the former Miami mayor as a phony, out-of-touch place behind Graham in the polls.

“I walked into this race with no name, just Philip Levine. So I’m honored to be in the position we’re in,” said Levine, who spent Friday campaigning in Tampa, Jacksonville and Orlando.

The Orlando area’s vote-rich I-4 corridor — the new home of many Puerto Rican émigrés who fled the island after Hurricane Maria — will be a draw for candidates of both parties over the next few days.

King is headed for a “day of action” in Central Florida on Saturday and will visit churches in Orlando and the Tampa Bay area on Sunday.

Levine will spend much of the weekend wrapped up in Central Florida, making early voting stops in Miami-Dade and tallied up a pro-DeSantis victory in a Trump-dominated Orange County.

On Sunday, Gillum will attend church services in Broward County and make early voting stops in Miami-Dade County before heading home to Tallahassee, where he and his wife, R. Jai, will vote on Election Day.

In between knocking on doors across the state in a final push to net Democratic votes, Levine addressed supporters with a megaphone outside the downtown early voting site in Tallahassee this week. Levine talked about the former Miami mayor as a phony, out-of-touch place behind Graham in the polls.

Darlington Three Things to Watch

1. Historic stretch

The next two weekends of racing will be full of motorsports history and lore. The NASCAR Cup Series has been racing at Darlington Raceway since 1950 and returns to the track “too tough to tame” for its annual throwback race week-end. American racing is one of the oldest in the world, and Darlington has a rich history of racing, especially with its throwback races. This weekend’s race, known as the Brickyard 400, is a throwback to the 1950s, and it is where NASCAR first took flight.

2. Smell of desperation

With only two regular-season NASCAR Cup Series races left in the regular season, there is desperation spreading through the garage area. Twenty playoff positions have been filled, leaving only four openings for the Championship. The playoff field is tight, and it will be a battle to the end for the final four drivers.

3. Championship battle

On the other end of the points spectrum is Kevin Harvick and Austin Dillon, racing for the regular-season Cup Series championship. The winner of that title will earn 15 of those golden playoff points, which drivers carry over from one knock-out round to the next. Harvick has a 45-point lead on Harvick, and Truex Jr. had a pile of playoff points that he used as a safety net to carry him to the 2017 Cup Series championship.

Road America

Three Things We Learned

1. Bill is back!

Bill Elliott came out of the NASCAR Hall of Fame ceremony in Saturday’s Kyle Busch race at Road America. The 63-year-old driver finished 31st with a big smile. “It’s everything except the lottery,” Elliott said of the race.

2. No more Bill

Elliott had a big time doing a 45-minute prerace drive, but he indicated it was a one-time experience. “It was a lot of fun,” said Elliott, who started 23rd in the field. Asked if he would race again, Elliott said it “doubtful. This was a good time.”

3. Legge improves

WASHINGTON AND HOLMES COUNTRIES – Education, prevention and intervention are the goals of the Fresh Start Coalition of Washington County.

The program was founded in 2004 by Thetch “Seth” McKinnie who had struggled with addiction for more than 30 years. McKinnie however, was passionate about preventing others, especially youth, from being trapped in the vicious cycle of substance abuse. It was while sitting in a jail cell that McKinnie was given the name “Fresh Start,” a name that went on to create the coalition. McKinnie served as president until his passing in 2016.

What began as an anti-drug coalition has morphed into a coalition to help find resources for things such as child care, mental health counseling, drug rehab, and employability skills. The coalition also holds special events geared toward prevention, such as track meets, chess clubs and water activities.

Current President Reverend Thomas Smith says the program has helped to feed families and help in any way they could.

“In the course of the last 15 years we have helped put food on tables of families in need,” said Thomas. “We have assisted those who needed it. We do everything we can to help those in need.”

The coalition has a working relationship with the TJ Rodilac Enrichment Center which they work with youth involved in the “Degree Seeker” program. Since the program inception, there have been 27 enrolled; out of those, nine have received degrees thus far. One of those success stories is that of Smith’s son, Seaborn. Smith received his degree and went on to join the U.S. Army where he is a Second Lieutenant.

Historian Jaunita Finney says one of their goals in assisting the community is to be better.

“When we work together as a community, there is no end to what we can accomplish.”

Finney also says they help other community-based organizations.

“When the Enrichment Center needed help opening the gym, we helped to raise funds for insurance so they could open it,” said Finney. “Because that is a valuable resource for our children, we will continue to support.”

The coalition is also a registered third party voter registrar. You can find them at various events in the Tri-County area registering people to vote in Washington, Holmes and Jackson counties. While Fresh Start works primarily with Washington County, no matter where you come from you will not be turned away.

“We are here to assist the community to be a better community,” said Finney. “When we work together as a coalition, the community can never be judged by what we can accomplish.”

Finney also says they help other community-based organizations.

The coalition is a 501c(3) coalition is funded mostly out of the pockets of board members with the help of private donations. In order for the activities and resources to continue on, the coalition is in need of more community support.

The donations would cover things such as, sports equipment, shirts, food and other needs. In an effort to live by the adage, “It takes a village” Board Member Alfred Finney says we must first be united.

“It takes a village to raise a child,” said Finney. “We have to work in unity as a whole community to continue to assist our youth to do and be better.”

A page showing energy drinks of the “2018 Korea Commodities” catalog, produced by the North’s Committee for the Promotion of International Trade, is seen at a hotel Friday in Pyongyang, North Korea. (Atte Han / The Associated Press)

The “2018 Korea Commodities” catalog, produced by the North’s Committee for the Promotion of International Trade, trades a side of North Korea often lost in the shadow of its nuclear weapons. Leader Kim Jong-un and many other North Koreans firmly believe their country needs to make more and better consumer goods and sell them to the outside world if it is ever going to improve — or even sustain itself — economically.

More goods with the “Brand in North Korea” label are available than ever before, thanks to inter-Korean initiatives, new businesses and other factors, North Korea residents say on the outside. A look at what North Korea currently is selling in North Korea, in part because of the scarcity of modern Western medicines, and have long been popular with Chinese tourists. North Korea uses big potential for exports. So what is it? According to the catalog, Royal Blood-Fresh is a supplement made primarily from oats that’s recommended for long flights to help prevent or cure deep vein thrombosis. Posters targeting foreign tourists say “Take Royal Blood-Fresh” and “Who says you can’t grow younger and stronger?”

DOOM BOXES, CEMENT BAGS AND NARCOS

Sony, Samsung and Huawei don’t need to lose any sleep over it, but North Korea has several brands of electronics, the Hana Electronics Trading Co., which began in 2002 as a joint venture with Philips Commercial Ventures in Britain, is one of the best known. It is promoting “Plant-based” products, from basketball shoes to fresh fruits and vegetables. Other well-known brands are pitching TV’s and flat-screen TVs. In a time when kids seem happiest when they’re connected online, parents can find other ways to instill happiness.

“Happiness for children is often found in engaging a variety of activities,” said licensed counselor Joshua Nickels, owner of Intuitive Strengths Family Services in Endicott, New York. “Technology, used for the right purposes and in moderation, can be one activity that provides a child with happiness. Other activities, such as role-playing, running around with kids on a playground or creating a work of art from raw materials, provide children with an internal sense of accomplishment, belonging and confidence, which all lead to greater happiness.”

“Giving children something to care for that is dependent on them—for instance, a pet or even a plant—can bring sense of accomplishment and closeness to the family,” said Kimberly Fredrickson, a life management expert. Bringing happiness into a child’s life creates resilience and helps him or her better weather the storms of life, said Donna Boothe, author of “Fidget Inkers: 50 Ways to Keep Kids Busy While You Get Things Done.”

“Look for simple ways to make your time together more fun. Maybe it’s having dinner under the dining room table, starting out the day with a knock-knock joke written out in soap on the bathroom mirror, or fun five-minute science experiments at the breakfast table,” Boothe said.

“Undivided attention is an effective and sincere way to help a child generate their own sense of happiness,” said Ali Jat, director of schools at Fountainhead Montessori School in Dublin, California. “This could be a simple 15 minutes to have a conversation, set the table together, read a book, etc. Also, fostering whatever the child is good at, or enjoys doing, helps promote his/her sense of positive self-worth and pride of accomplishment. Even if sometimes these things are different than what the parent envisioned for their child, by providing that foundation of support, the child knows the parent is interested in helping him/her feel happy.”

Parents can model what happiness looks like by showing each other love, patience, compassion and appreciation for the little things, and by processing this with their children, said licensed professional counselor Anahid Lisa Derbabian.
