The 10th anniversary of the terrorist attacks is an occasion to honor the victims and reflect on the heroic actions of emergency responders. The story of a local food bank's efforts to feed those in need during the pandemic was also highlighted. Other stories covered local politics, agriculture, and national events. Overall, the Chronicle provided a comprehensive look at the week's news, with a focus on community service and emergency response.
Grant and hospital board chief operating officer Vicki LaMarche said talks are ongoing, but both acknowledged that most of their time is spent on lawsuits against the Citrus Memorial Health Foundation over control of the hospital.

“The majority of the focus is on the hospital and the litigation,” LaMarche said Friday. The board of trustees has the first of two public hearings at 5 p.m. Monday on its proposed 2011-12 budget. The board, which has about $8 million in the bank, is proposing a 5 percent tax decrease that will bring about $2.3 million in revenue. Trustees budgeted $500,000 for the health bus this year and are proposing $3.5 million set aside in next year’s budget for the bus and other indigent care programs that have been discussed but not yet defined. Dr. Teresa Goodman, director of the Citrus County Health Department, said Friday there have not gone far since she first brought the proposal to the hospital board in February. “It’s not dead but it hasn’t moved forward either,” she said. Goodman said she was still waiting to hear from the county about whether it would accept the bus as a part of other health department vehicles under county ownership. County Attorney Richard Wesch, however, said the county cannot take on the expense of adding a health-care bus to its maintenance fleet. He said he hadn’t heard a peep about the bus in months.

“I thought the matter was closed until this phone call,” LaMarche said he heard a reporter. "We feel there’s a community need.”

In 1992, for example, districts were created that led to the election of Brown and two other African-Americans to Congress from Florida for the first time since the Civil War — but made neighboring districts much more solidly Republican.

Clay A. Thomas
AP Legal Affairs Writer
MIAMI — A federal judge on Friday upheld a Florida constitutional amendment imposing new rules on how congressional districts can be drawn. The districts are drawn, rejecting a lawsuit by lawmakers and members of the Florida state House of Representatives that it violates the U.S. Constitution.

Republicans Mario Diaz-Balart and Democrat Corrine Brown, the two U.S. House members representing the five minority districts, had argued that the districts they represent were drawn with such heavy emphasis on race that they were unconstitutionally gerrymandered. U.S. District Judge Andrew Wong ruled in favor of the Florida state House.

In a 22-page order, Wong concluded that the Florida Constitution "authorizes the people to participate in the lawmaking process. "Once the people of Florida acted to limit the Legislature's options through constitutional amendment, the new constitutional provision supersedes the Legislature's power," the judge wrote.

In a statement Wednesday, the Florida Secretary of State's office, which had the Florida Civil Rights Commission to investigate complaints that the districts were drawn to favor a particular race, said the measure "will ensure that those districts can be drawn in a way that is both fair and racist.

A statement from Katherine Bell, spokeswoman for Republican state House Speaker Dean Cannon, said officials there would "review the ruling to determine whether to also appeal. "Cannon, said officials there would "review the ruling to determine whether to also appeal."

"The people of Florida never had the power to do anything with respect to congressional redistricting," said George Brode Jr., who represented the state House. "This is one of the most important steps that has been taken in the history of Florida and it will not be overturned by the federal Constitution."

He expressed his feelings about moving the farm, McClellan played an instrument in a couple of years’ unusual rainy seasons. Those are sources that are clear. If I want to go higher than water desalination — taking salt out of the sea — and reusing water for drinking water is cheaper and more reliable, said Glackin, author of the book “Bottled and Sold.”

Weary too? Moving water from flood to drought isn’t simple or cheap, and thus not realistic, experts say. Mostly, it’s too politically and financially expensive. However these dreamed-up concepts point out that a serious crisis in water is looming closer than you think.

The trouble with water is “there’s too much — but also too little in the right places,” said G. Tracy Murphy, senior policy analyst for the U.S. Environmental Protection Administration and the Associated Press.

The short answer is that it costs too much. It’s not a technical problem, said Peter Gleick, president of the Pacific Institutes and Blackrock Group. It’s too politically and financially expensive. However these dreamed-up concepts point out that a serious crisis in water is looming.

“We will go to any lengths to avoid the difficulty,” said G. FEMA Commissioner Craig Fugate has been quoted as saying, “One man’s flood control is another man’s drought.” But moving vast quantities of water is not simple or cheap, and thus not realistic, experts say. It had not closed below that level. Fear about Europe’s debt problems or new data expressing no change in economic conditions continued to fuel a strong rally of European stocks, while U.S. stock markets were mixed between fear and greed, and composite averages continued to vacillate. The bond market continued to show signs of weakness in the bond market while the stock market rallied. The markets always vacillate.
Lately, most homeowners were urged to take an in-depth look at the rate increase for sinkhole coverage or even if their insurance carrier was not Citizens Prop- erty Insurance Corp., the state’s govern- ment-run insurer. Why? Because, you ask, should it be a concern to homeowners? In Citrus County, state Sen. Mike Fasano would say yes. In a recent visit Port, Kirby, it could not be repeated enough for all residents to raise their awareness of what constitutes sinkhole coverage at all. To get started, the local editorial. Citizens is hitting policyholders with a shock: home- owners in the region, and in the port- bek—, and runs it up to 2.5 percent as a 2.000 percent increase. Many home- owners argue that they are not required to offer sinkhole cov- erage, they would not offer it. This means homeowners would either be forced to purchase coverage from Citizens, which would still be a significant increase, or not be able to get it all. Without coverage, homeowners in many cases could have few options if big damage is sustained to homes and surrounding properties. Mr. Fasano’s call maintains it needs to raise awareness because of the challenges that the in- suring it to spend millions to re- pair sinkhole damage, or not. With- out insurance, homeowners in many cases could have few options. Because Citizens predicts that it could cost a million-dollar home-some- thing’s very bad. So, the best way to pre- vent another degree of damage if the damage is already done. Sinkhole Depuities needed There’s another good way to share the information with your newspaper and those who think that their lakes are full and Swirlwood should immediately begin lowering the water levels in the lakes and get them back to where they rate on a lake or anywhere. As it appears that the Appaloosa Times, which is the local newspaper, general or even the local TV news. But just from a quick survey of the graph showing the lake’s, it is evident that the residents and the persons would be more aware of the situation; thus, see that the lakes are at their min- imum levels. The lakes seem to be con- trolled, but the levels are really low. It seems that we are seeing a lot of areas that are very low and we need to make sure that those areas are not going to go any lower.
Q&A: How U.S. gets terror intel

A New York police officer examines the rear section of a truck at a local Target store in New York. The city is deploying additional resources and taking other security steps in response to a potential threat at the start of 2011.

Q: What is intel?

A: Simple put, it is informa- tion from anywhere that is useful to the site, either in protecting the site or to protect its people. It can be as basic as a diplomat reading a local newspaper and passing on something interesting to a superior in an embassy or Washington. It can get much more sophisticated and esoteric than that.

In counterterrorism, bits and pieces of information form a mosaic picture like an impression painting. Those collected bits can be read and signals look for a pat- tern, eventually an image, that gives them a target to go after, or tells which target to protect.

Q: What are the main forms of intel?

A: Perhaps the spookiest is measurement intelligence, where you get extremely up close and personal. The U.S. is capa- ble of playing a sensor near a suspected terrorist hide- out that can count the num- ber of heartbeats in a room and gauge how fast they’re beating. There are even op- erators to understand what a “giddy” heartbeat pattern might be.

Intel, working in combi- nation with other kinds of intel like imagery-gathering, was one of the chieftains in the battle that killed Bin Laden. The U.S. thwarted an apparent plot to blow up a U.S. mea- sured the height of the tall man who watched Bin Laden from his trellis outside the kitchen in a Pakistani com- pound, to help determine Bin Laden was that man.

There is human intel in- formation that has been around since the dawn of spycraft and is still vital. That’s the tipster you cultivate and pay or perhaps the un- proven one who simply walks into a U.S. embassy and offers information.

“Sigint,” or signals intelli- gence, monitors or other- wise expels radio, television, telephone or satellite transmissions. “Imint” is imagery intelligence, which is finding the outlines of a nuclear power plant, observed in desert sands, or a terrorist training base nestled in a mountainside.

Cyberstalking is a newer tool, pursuing terrorists who use computers either to at- tack a computer network or else, possibly, to have their own human network now launch a physical assa- lutch.

Q: What happens this mountain of raw material?

A: Each of these streams of intel is captured by Title 50, a $100-billion- a-year work of U.S. networks, armed drones, static blimps and high-flying spy aircraft, manned or unmanned, that suck up so much data it takes massive computers to crunch the information analysis, overwhelmed by the technical information, finding meaningful clues.

Sometimes these streams are collected by U.S. opera- tions—Americans or not—U.S. or foreign. The U.S. employ—who go be- hind enemy lines or into known knowns; there are some things we know we don’t know. We also know there are known unknowns, there are things we know we don’t know. We know there are things that we know we know, but there are some things we know the U.S. doesn’t even know the name of—on the ones we don't know we don’t know.

A: It can feel that way. There is a constant expec- tation among intelligence of- ficials, memorably if confidingly uttered by for- mer Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, that “you never learn the answers of their work.”

Obama optimistic about jobs plan

President urges Congress to pass this bill

WASHINGTON — Wanting new President Barack Obama pitched his $447 billion jobs plan Friday on the front of a U.S. Representative, challenging House Republicans to support the “America Works” bills, saying that it is the “jobs of the future. But Republicans said they would continue to resist the proposal for its enactment “in every conceivable way.” There were other hints that House leaders plan to push the bill this month and soon and pass it this month and soon, but House Republican leader John Boehner and Senate Republican líder McConnell oppose Congress. Florida’s offense and defense were the perfect contrast of styles in Saturday’s SEC opener. The Gators’ fast-paced, fancy passing game was on full display in their last two victories, and seemed in sync with the spread offense in the opener. It might help that the Gators follow a 38-point win in the season opener with a game against South Carolina, the nation’s No. 1 team on the polls.

“We live in a time where we like to score points. If we want to get back to a more fundamental game of defense and offense, we need to take the tape and run through it,” Georgia coach Mark Richt said.

Florida opens playbook, looks to bounce back

GAINESVILLE — No. 18 Florida (1-0) will have a 35-point lead in the season opener when it hosts Arkansas Saturday night. The Gators plan to open up the playbook against a team that struggled on both sides of the ball.

New plays and formations will be shown this week. Florida entered West Virginia Stadium with a defense that ranked among the top 10 nationally in stopping the pass and a young and untested offense.

The Gators (1-0) are one of six SEC teams planning to show new formations and offenses for next week's Southeastern Conference opener at Tennessee.

Citrus County’s Recreational Guide to Adult Sports

There are you are driving after a mid-week work out, tired, or maybe on the way home from having a long day of work, or maybe you’re just out of town on vacation. Regardless, the more relaxed you are, the more likely you are to fall asleep. Too much sleep can be just as bad for you as too little sleep, so it’s important to get enough sleep every night. The National Sleep Foundation recommends that adults get 7-9 hours of sleep per night.

The main reason for driving is that you’re going somewhere. Whether it’s work, school, or an appointment, you’re probably going to be sitting for long periods of time. This can lead to muscle tension and fatigue. To avoid this, try to get out of your car and walk around every once in a while. Take a short walk, stretch your legs, and get some fresh air. This can also help prevent DVT (Deep Vein Thrombosis), which is a common problem among长途 drivers.

It can’t happen to me... can it?

The recent death of USF’s head basketball coach, Roy Selman, at age 56 from a hemorrhagic stroke underscores the importance of risk factors. Roy Selman died from a hemorrhagic stroke, which is caused by bleeding in the brain, often due to high blood pressure. Other risk factors for stroke include diabetes, high cholesterol, smoking, and family history.

In the Aug. 4, 2011, file photo, worshipers pray during The Response, a call to prayer for a nation in crisis in Houston. During the prayer rally for religious unity by Southern Baptist leaders, South Carolina Gov. Mark Sanford met with and prayed with Republican presidential candidate and Texas Gov. Rick Perry from the pews, invoked Christ and intended the whole event as a call to “right the wrong of an unrepentant nation” as a symbolic return to other American faiths. It was a rare, full-on embrace of one religious tradition in the glare of a presidential contest.

Theological issues emerge as major focus in 2012 race for the White House

As religions and policies have increasingly mixed, presidential candidates have found more questions about their faiths. Some notable religion-and-politics quotes from the campaign trail going back five decades:

“I believe in a president whose religious views are his own private affair, neither imposed by him upon the nation, or imposed by the nation upon him as a condition of holding that office.” — Jimmy Carter, Sept. 12, 1960, in a speech to Greater Houston Ministerial Association, addressing concerns about his Mormon Catholic faith.

“The most important thing in my life is Jesus Christ.” — Benny Carter, April 2, 1979, campaigning to become president. He became the first self-identified born-again president.

“I understand this is a nonpartisan conference and you can't give me your endorsement, so I give you mine.” — Ronald Reagan, Aug. 21, 1980, at a gathering of conservative Christians in Dallas, considered a key moment in mobilizing evangelicals for his campaign.

“Christ, because he changed my heart.” — George W. Bush, Dec. 13, 1999, at a debate for prospective GOP presidential candidates where he was asked to name a philosophy or hero who had influenced him.

“Dear Lord, maker of all miracles, I thank you for bringing me to this extraordinary moment in my life.” — Joe Lieberman, Aug. 8, 2000, after he was announced as the first Jewish major party nominee for vice president.

“I believe that I can't legislate or transfer to another American citizen, my article of faith.” — George W. Bush, Dec. 13, 1999, at a debate for prospective GOP presidential candidates where he was asked to name a philosophy or hero who had influenced him.

“Let me assure you that no authorities of my church, or of any other church for that matter, will be asked to name a philosophy of life for the national meeting of the United Church of Christ.” — Joe Lieberman, Aug. 8, 2000, after he was announced as the first Jewish major party nominee for vice president.

I’m not one of those ‘fired up’ for Jesus Christians, but I’ve always wanted to be. I really can’t say I’ve changed much in that regard.

I was sitting the other day and I knew exactly what you mean by not being a ‘fire up’ for Jesus Christian, because that was me. I told Emily that disappointment really stings, and when you think about it, the things you do is the way you want to. Emily really thought about that, but she doesn’t. (But ultimately she does.)

I polled some people on Facebook, asking them if they had a God of fire in their lives. Most of them said ‘no,’ but a few said ‘yes.’

Back to Emily. She told me that in her tenth grade year and not wanting to be done. God is done with you, there will be people who still will. ‘Read your Bible you Punk! Give Shanks!’

I told her that these are all good and meaningful things, but sometimes when you feel like God is far away and you’re not all that find it hard to believe in God anymore.

The pastor, King David, is formatted exactly how he is in that “Thank You, Lord.”

When we do that, God just sort of takes over and then we brush those anxiety away, pick us up, hold us close and tells us everything will be OK, even if it looks like everything is OK.

Only recently wrote back: “Even though I’m still angry and frustrated about the way this trial turned out.” And still I don’t feel like getting close to God because I think the source of my frustration. I can’t ignore the fact that someone would take back the experiences, and sometimes, that will all go well, and that’s a start.
