Defying veto threat, House OKs health law change

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Balking aside a White House veto threat, the Republican-controlled House voted by a healthy bipartisan majority Friday to weaken a core component of “Obamacare” and permit the sale of individual health coverage that falls short of requirements in the law.

In all, 290 Democrats broke ranks and supported the legislation, a total that underscored the growing importance of the issue in the weeks since millions of Americans have flocked online to sign up for coverage before the Dec. 21 deadline.

The final vote was 265-157 as House members debated the issue over the course of three votes, with key Republicans opposing the legislation.

The measure faces an uncertain fate in the Senate, where Democrats hold a 53-47 majority and where the legislation faces potential blocking votes from conservative senators.

Greene can’t challenge law

Judge rules property appraiser can’t contest law that allows Duke to treat equipment as salvage

A judge on Friday dealt a significant blow to Property Appraiser Geoff Greene’s case against Duke Energy, saying Greene cannot challenge a state law that allows Duke to treat $3.1 billion worth of pollution-control equipment as salvage.

Circuit Court Judge T. Michael Johnson also said a $50 million lawsuit by several power companies to assess pollution-control equipment as salvage, which drops its taxable value by about $800 million, was improper and should be dismissed.

Johnson issued a statement halting the ruling:

“We applaud the court’s ruling, which supports our position that pollution control equipment should be assessed at market value as salvage,” the statement read.

Scott responded by noting that there is a surplus in the county that officials should work with the Department of Transportation to pursue fund- ing for any infrastructure projects. He didn’t use the name of a specific project, but he did mention to local civil members Paula Wheeler and Frank Beam that they should be looking for.

“Transportation to pursue funding for springs restoration and the case for homes to allow the city and county to recover commercial water and fertilizer use,”

“The question is as seriously important to the West side of the county,” Wheeler said. “We have an ongoing concern that permits are being issued for commercial drilling into our aquifer for battle water and ship it out of our county.”

Scott encouraged Wheeler to call his office if anyone has a question on the west side of the county.

“If you have an issue on the west side, give me a call,” he said.

Wheeler told the governor that the city that allows the health of the river and the quality of the water is a top priority.

Citrus County Commission Chairman Joe Miskiewicz introduced himself Friday morning to announce his shift to Black Rock Financial Group.

“Your current may contain several years for springs,” he said. “It’s the biggest problem, long-term, in our state.”

Scott urged anyone with questions to call his office.

“I return phone calls,” he said.

Wheeler said after Scott told him that he’ll be hearing from people.

“By the offer for this is a hospital that the whole world should be interested in,” he said.

Mr. Brown said that protection of springs and water bodies is a top priority.

“We increase funding every year for springs,” he said.

Manatee deaths reinforce need for vigilance and protection

Stop common core

The new Common Core State Standards (CCSS) are a national set of educational standards that have been adopted by 46 states. However, many people are concerned about these new standards because they believe they are not appropriate for all students. The CCSS are based on research and evidence and are intended to prepare students for college and careers. However, there are concerns about the implementation of the CCSS, including the amount of time and resources required to adopt them.

Christopher Thoren of Seton Hall University is a leading advocate for the CCSS. He argues that the new standards are necessary to ensure that all students are prepared for college and career.

On the other hand, some parents and teachers are concerned about the CCSS. They argue that the standards are too focused on standardized test scores and do not take into account the needs of all students. They also worry that the implementation of the CCSS will be costly and time-consuming.

The CCSS are a national set of educational standards that are intended to prepare students for college and careers. However, there are concerns about the implementation of the CCSS, including the amount of time and resources required to adopt them.

When I reviewed the math standards would be developed and implemented nationwide.

Professor James Milgram, a mathematics professor at Stanford University, has said that the Common Core is not a comprehensive reform of the education system. He argues that the CCSS are designed to make students more competitive in the global marketplace.

However, some critics argue that the CCSS are not working as intended. For example, some states have reported that students are not meeting the standards, and there have been concerns about the quality of the assessments.

China to ease one-child policy, abolish labor camps

China will allow its couples to have two children starting in 2014, state-run media quoted President Hu Jintao as saying on Friday.

The change would represent a significant easing of the world’s most stringent fertility control policy, which has been a key element of China’s economic development since it introduced the policy in 1979 to reduce population growth.

In 1980, China implemented what is known as the one-child policy, which is intended to control the growth of the country’s population. Under the policy, a family is allowed to have only one child if both parents are only children, or two if at least one of the parents has a sibling.

This policy has been controversial and has been blamed for a range of problems, including gender imbalance and social tensions.

The government announced the plan in a letter from Hu to provincial leaders, said the Associated Press.

SAN FRANCISCO — Dressed in black Batgirl costume, his forks and spoons in hand, 5-year-old Jonatan afford a smile around San Francisco, a 5-year-old who has battled leukemia for years fulfilled his wish Friday to be his favorite superhero.

In the process, Miles Scott became the center of social media and attracted thousands of fans around the country, including the San Francisco Giants mascot — Lou Seal, from the San Francisco Giants.

Miles Scott was able to fulfill his wish through the Make-A-Wish Foundation, the city and volunteers who stepped forward to help.

Batkid had a police escort wotting through the construction zone, captured the Riddler as he rubbed a bank, and saved the Penguin from the Gotham City General Hospital — just as Batman would.

Miles, who is in remission, wanted to be his favorite superhero. He spent the day zooming from one adventure to the next.

“Batkid Saves San Francisco” special-edition newspapers were distributed copies of the event.

TIRANA, Albania — The minimum viable dose of the poisonous gas would be used, a top Albanian official said Friday when Albania refused to host the destruction of the weapons.

The surprise refusal by the one-time Syrian ally of the United States was a major setback to U.S.-led efforts to rid the world of Syria’s arsenal of chemical weapons.

The United Nations on Friday confirmed that at least 140 people were killed in a series of earthquakes, landslides and flooding triggered by Typhoon Nega-ni, which struck Indonesia’s east coast earlier in the week.

The typhoon, the strongest to hit Indonesia this year, hit the island of Sulawesi on Thursday, killing at least 140 people and leaving thousands homeless.

The UN’s Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs said it had received reports of at least 140 deaths and that more than 10,000 people were displaced.

The agency also reported that at least 10,000 people were trapped in the town of Sigi, on the island of Flores, due to a massive flooding caused by the typhoon.

As Ekeli explained, Marsden essentially became a striker by running an overlap and breaking toward the goal after passing the half off. Being right-foot dominant, any shots not broken toward the goal would break toward the post as opposed to away.

“I thought by doing that, we would benefit his style of play,” Ekeli said of Marsden. “He could only do on the outside as he could get into that open space and could get the ball back inside the box.”

INDIANAPOLIS — Roy Hibbert scored 24 points and had eight rebounds as the Pacers routed the Cleveland Cavaliers 111-90 for the team’s first victory in six games and its fourth straight at home.

Hibbert had plenty of help. Paul George scored 30 of his 36 points in the third and fourth quarters and Lance Stephenson finished with 11 points.

The short-handed Bulls (26-40) spent most of the game playing catch-up without the usual starters in the lineup. The Bulls could simply not keep up on the strength of the Pacers, who had nine players figure in the scoring.

Washington left wing Jason Chimera (25) and Detroit defenseman Brian Lashoff (23) vie for the puck.

Calm before the storm — Jeff Teague had a career-high 21 points and 10 assists as the Atlanta Hawks went to 10-4 in the final period to win by only the second double-digit win of the season for the Charlotte Bobcats.

Kyle Tyrone, wearing a mask to protect a left eye that was injured in a fall, had 13 points for the Hawks, who had the lead for good in the third quarter and scored more than 120 points for the first time in four years.

On the game's opening possession, the Lecanto girls' soccer team used some quickness against No. 3 Louisville and put a well-placed shot to the corner of the six-yard box and never looked back. But Bandstra was able to come up with the diving save again on the loan.

For the next 20 minutes, the game remained as even as the score, as both teams played back and forth. Bandstra had another that with 10 minutes remaining on the clock. The Lecanto offense finally found the goal in second half Friday in East Lansing, Mich. Michigan State won 62-53. The Spartans (3-0) beat No. 3 Louisville 99-54.

The Huskies (3-0) used a 13-2 run early in the second half to take a 56-45 lead, and quickness against No. 8 Connecticut showed its depth and Maryland (2-1) never got closer than nine points.

Alyssa Thomas had 20 points and 11 rebounds for the Terrapins, who lost to the Huskies, 99-54, in a second-round game of the national final. She played in an exhibition this season, then sat out the first two games for NCAA eligibility concerns. The Citrus put some pressure on No. 3 Louisville, then, with nine seconds on the clock, the Golden Bears had two chances to take the lead in the final minutes, but Courtney Range was stymied by the Panther defense. But Range was cuffed for off-side going to the bankers in the first half.

Local church doing its part to be a welcoming destination

DURING BADROCK'S days as a child, he spent hours with his grandmother, drawing and painting in a sand box. It was his sanctuary. So it was no surprise to many that he recently turned to the sand box as a form of therapy.

In the sand therapy, clients sit by themselves in a small, enclosed space and are given a box of sand. They are encouraged to let their thoughts and feelings guide them in making a scene of anything they want. It’s a form of therapy that has been used for decades in various forms of counseling.

“I have seen it as a way to bring someone to the surface of their thoughts and feelings,” said Padgett. “It helps them to express their emotions in a safe and controlled environment.”

For a few weeks ago, I went to see a friend who’s a therapist. We were sitting on a couch, talking about the pressures of life and the challenges of everyday. I mentioned the sand therapy to him, and he nodded in agreement. “It’s a wonderful tool,” he said. “It helps clients to express their feelings and to process their emotions.”

He explained that the sand box is a place where people can express themselves without fear of judgment. It’s a space where they can let their imagination run wild. “It’s like a therapy sandbox, where people can mold their thoughts and feelings into a scene and a metaphor of their inner world,” he said.

But it is what it is, as they say. I decided to give it a try, to see if it could be a helpful tool for my own mental health.

It was a small box, with smooth, white sand that was soft to the touch. I sat down in a comfortable chair, closed my eyes, and took a deep breath. I felt the tension in my body begin to relax. I let my thoughts drift, and I began to shape the sand into a scene of my own.

I started with a mountain, a symbol of strength and stability. I added a river, winding its way through the valley, representing the flow of life. I created a forest, filled with trees of different shapes and sizes, representing the diversity of human experience.

As I worked, my mind began to clear. I felt a sense of peace and calm wash over me. It was as if the sand was helping me to bring my thoughts and feelings to the surface, to express them in a way that was safe and healing.

In the end, I left the box with a smile on my face, feeling lighter and more at peace. I knew that I had found a tool that could help me to navigate the challenges of life, and I was grateful for that.

As I stood up, I realized that the sand therapy was not just a tool for my own personal growth, but also a tool for the growth of others. It could be a way to bring people together, to connect with others who are going through similar challenges.

I knew then that I wanted to bring sand therapy to my community, to help others to find a way to express their feelings and to process their emotions. And so, I began my journey as a sand therapy practitioner, helping others to find their own way to healing and growth.
