On the deserted south end of Egans Creek Greenway

F or years now, Don Lay has been it into me that in a photo with a long-sleeved shirt, lots of DEET on the few parts of me wearing long pants and mosquito control truck was going down the trail. A mosquito control truck was seen at the intersection of Surfside and Citrona, intersection.

The problem was finally addressed at a Joint Local Planning Agency meeting between the city and county commissioners, but never before the city almost spent sooner. At first, County Attorney David Deed did not want to give the county can't sell the property if the current group of commissioners have had trouble agreeing on how the money should be used for the community interest is that the property stays in the community. The problem is that these areas are 90 years or more than 90 years. City Commissioner Eric Hallman suggested a “restrictive covenant equal to a lease period of 30 years.” But City Commissioner Eric Childs noted that, originally, the deed says 30 years.

Education’s future with online classes, community college

Many U.S. colleges are hard hit by the economic downturn and are looking to online courses as a way to reduce costs and make it through to graduate. First-year and two-year schools are among the most difficult to be accepted into, and the average cost is around $12,000. Many college graduates are looking to return for their degrees and online courses are a way to make it through to graduate. It is easy to see why online learning is becoming more popular. In addition, the Internet offers a variety of online classes that can be taken anywhere in the world. Other options for online learning are community colleges that offer lower costs, easier entry and remecourses. Both offer lower costs, easier entry and remecourses.

Other colleges are based almost wholly online, such as rapidly growing Florida. University 3 has a small campus in north Jacksonville, for instance, but most students are enrolled in an exhaustive online curricu-
um. These students attend schools that are often the most motivated to learn and succeed. Therefore, those colleges are the most difficult to be accepted into, but offer the highest graduation rates.

Many more college students also push students to gain experience through internships, and then assist them in finding a job upon graduation. After all, the whole college experience is really about that – graduating, and finding a good job in your field.

Amendment 4 not the answer

In Sept. 10 opinion piece (“If you must help manage growth”), Peter Johnson noted that concerns are “adversely affected” by Amendment 4. He is wrong. Today, few concerns are greater than the health and financial problems related to sprawl and piecemeal growth management. In this environmental crisis, Amendment 4 would only make the system worse.

Even though Amendment 4 was passed by Florida’s voters, this isn’t a cure for our state’s growth management watch-dogging. Nor has Amendment 4 made any efforts to improve growth management. In fact, Amendment 4 is the opposite of what growth management is all about.

In Nassau County, we continue efforts to diversify our economy, adding jobs in insurance, finance, banking, trade, tourism and hospitality, education and health services. About a year ago, Orlando-based economist Hank Fishkind completed a study called the “Nassau County Fiscal Sustainability Study.” In that report, Fishkind pointed out that an economy based on tourism and real estate is not sustainable.

An economy needs to have a balance of land-use including residential, office, retail and industrial. Unfortunatley, Amendment 4 would make it virtually impossible to control residential sprawl and new commercial development.

In Amendment 4, the state government would suggest that Amendment 4 is not the answer. Amendment 4 would lead to change in Florida’s current growth management practices. On this point, he is quite wrong.

More than 160 business, commerce, community, environmental, and professional organizations representing millions of Florida jobs have opposed Amendment 4.

Swine flu spikes in Yulee, Hilliard schools

RYAN SMITH News-Leader

Flu-like illnesses are spiking at some public schools in Nassau County, as reported by the Nassau County Department of Health. Yulee Middle School and Hilliard Middle School are among those being hit.

Swine flu in Hilliard

The Nassau County Health Department will hold a community education session on H1N1, or swine flu, this week. The meeting will be held at 6 p.m. Tuesday, March 16, at the Nassau County office in Yulee. The department said the outbreak has spread to 75 and will be on a first-come, first-served basis.

Swine flu hotline

The Florida Department of Health has a toll-free number to provide public health information and updates on H1N1 flu-like illness, especially in the Yulee area. The line is available from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. daily in English, Spanish and Creole.

The number is 877-392-5021.

DEALING with the flu again and again is something that the medical profession sees every day, but the current strain is affecting the entire state.

Kim Geib, the department's communications officer, said close quarters in schools are especially concerning.

"A few cases have been confirmed," she said last week. "We are seeing a range of 30 to 50 percent of the students being sick in the classroom, who were sent home due to flu-like symptoms," she said. "We're seeing a significant number of cases in middle and high schools." For more information about the swine flu education forum, call 954-360-1500.

A popular movie celebrates two women very different yet very much alike. “Julie & Julia” has proven a poppa hit for men and women. The two women living in very different times never quite knew that both were courting the same man - from the amazing cooking legend Julia Child.

The plot of the movie is triggered by a young woman, Julie Powell, frustrated by a demanding job and her lack of self-confidence who sets out to cook all the recipes in Julia Child’s famous cookbook, Mastering the Art of French Cooking. The movie goes back and forth between the real life stories as well as between the two stories simultaneously.

Like the young Julie the Big Guy was an odd alliance. He was 10 years older than her and I became addicted to Julia Child. Her husband, Paul Child, took her to France in 1940. She fell in love with France and everything French, especially the food. The marriage was an odd alliance. He was an English writer, she was a young woman who set out to change things. He and his wife became living legends. In our day and age, these two stories might not exist.

Instead of a well-worn cookbook our heroine sent away for a copy of Julia Child’s first book, Mastering the Art of French Cooking. Julia Child did what seemed impossible in her day and age. She inspire the humblest of cooks. Her husband, Paul Child, took her to France in 1940. She fell in love with France and everything French, especially the food. The marriage was an odd alliance. He was an English writer, she was a young woman who set out to change things. He and his wife became living legends. In our day and age, these two stories might not exist.

The French Chef, Julia Child’s first book, Mastering the Art of French Cooking was an instant success. Julia Child and Paul Child moved to France and began teaching cooking at Le Cordon Bleu, a culinary school in Paris. Julia Child was an instant success in France and became known as the “enfant terrible of the kitchen.” She was known for her wry sense of humor and her ability to make even the most difficult cooking tasks seem easy. She quickly became a sensation in France and soon started to attract a following of devoted fans around the world.

The movie begins with a young woman, Julie Powell, who is frustrated by a demanding job and her lack of self-confidence. She decides to start a blog about her culinary adventures and quickly becomes a sensation online. Her blog becomes so popular that she is approached by a producer who wants to turn her life story into a movie. Julie agrees and the movie begins to shoot.

The movie follows Julie as she travels to France and begins to work with Julia Child. Through their experiences, we see how Julia’s cooking style and philosophy have influenced Julie’s own cooking. We also see how Julia’s life with Paul Child has shaped her into the woman she is today. The movie is a heartwarming tale of two women who have found their own paths in life and how they have inspired each other along the way.

As the movie reaches its climax, we see Julie and Julia preparing a grand meal together. The ingredients are fresh and the aroma of the food fills the kitchen. The camera zooms in on their faces, their expressions full of love and friendship. The music swells, and we see the scene end with a close-up of Julie’s face, her eyes filled with tears of joy and gratitude. The end credits roll, and we are left with a sense of inspiration and hope for the future.
