It is again time for the Peanut Festival. This is the 24th annual festival, and will be held in the Indian River Park on Sunday, October 6. The festival will run from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. The theme this year is “Celebrating Our Roots.”

The Peanut Festival is held every year as a tribute to the memory of Melvin Carl Gallups. Melvin took on the responsibility of the Galveston Fairgrounds around the age of nineteen.

We will also remember all those who have passed away since the Fairgrounds were established.

Everyone knew Brother James Blossom, Frank Farmer, and Steve Goodson knew how to turn heads. We have learned from their knowledge.

This is a family festival, where there is plenty of food, fun, games, and entertainment.

The Watson Family is in charge of entertainment on Saturday, with their radio and television show.

As part of the Beaches to Blackwater Festival, The 24th annual Peanut Festival will feature a variety show honoring our “military.” Please RSVP to H.J. – Peggy Grantham 982-9490 or sign up in our meet-up site https://www.meetup.com/peanutfestival

MOTHER MUST LET DAUGHTER BE AN INDEPENDENT ADULT

DEAR HARRIETTE:

Dearest Mom, Atlanta

DEAR CONCERNED MOM:

As you already know, you cannot live your daughter's life for her. For her to say she does not want to speak to her family for 10 years means she must feel suffocated in some way. She wants to be independent. You say she is an adult. It is probably time for her to go out on her own and figure out how to live independently. Will she make mistakes? Of course. Everyone does, even people who seem to be well-adjusted.

For now, give her space. Let her make choices and live with them. If you know people who are close to her who she will allow to check in with her, rely on them to keep you posted on how she is doing. When she does come around, resist the temptation to give her advice. Become a good listener. If she asks you for input, give it in as loving a manner as possible. The only way she is going to gain maturity is to grow up.

You may want to seek some mental health counseling during this period. Learn how you can become independent of your daughter. When you both can live your lives separately, you may end up better able to coexist.

There is a person I know who is always a critic.
You know the kind. Decides on dramas, and more dramas.
Every time I see this person, he is upset about something that just happened.
Nothing is ever his fault. Nothing ever goes right in his life.

He’s always complaining about something, anything; something to happen or wanting someone to do something for him.

There was a time when I used to play the game with this person, long before I realized it was a game.

The game is called manipulation, and for all those people out there who haven’t gotten into it yet, spoiler alert: you’re always going to lose.

It’s a serious subject for a “Woman on the Edge Column,” but a good one because I’ve recently reached the end of the game. Maybe I can save your parents or grandparents out there some frustration and grief.

This is how it goes:

First, you want something for your children and you have sacrificed and given them what they need to have a good future. But wait! one of them seems to need more than the others. He comes back for seconds; he is the one who is satiated and moving on to the next step of maturity.

At first, you give it to him, secondly, and then the others are working hard and developing a plan for their lives. A second doesn’t keep showing up with his hand out. When he realizes you are beginning to see through his remarks in the telephone, he offers stories so you will feel better about the fact that you keep giving to him.

Time passes. He’s not progressing and his stories get more and more creative. It might be months or it might be years, but eventually, if you really care about this child, you will see through his stories and his plan and his dreams.

And you finally say: “No”.

Then his stories become more desperate and more bizarre. He’s counting on tall tales to get you off-guard. While you are trying to figure out if he could possibly be telling the truth, he weakens your resolve with words, such as the ones-of-life, also known as “spreaders.”

The FFS uses bulldozers and plows to move earth and close off hot spots, where there are no hydrants available. Their wildland prevention crews helped out painting the Midway Fire Department. It was also an opportunity for the firefighters to show their support for fellow firefighters.

The Midway Fire Department received the anniversary this weekend, giving back to the community by offering a glimpse into the fire station and equipment. The firefighters fielded questions from the community regarding how the equipment works, what it’s used for, and opened the doors for the public to get in and get a firsthand look.

A live demonstration was put on, showcasing extraction techniques that the department uses in motor vehicle accidents. The volunteer department ripped the doors off a Pontiac, and cut the roof off with hydraulic tools, such as the jaws-of-life, also known as “spreaders.”

The Bagdad Volunteer Fire Department celebrated its 50th anniversary this weekend, giving back to the community by offering a glimpse into the fire station and equipment and exhibiting a demonstration of life-saving techniques.

Bagdad pulled out their firefighting arsenal for public viewing. The firefighters fielded questions from the community regarding how the equipment works, what it’s used for and opened the doors for the public to get in and get a first-hand look. A lucky few managed to spray the fire hose off of one of the fire engines. It was also an opportunity to educate about fire safety.

Tours were brought through a mobile trailer borrowed from the Midway Fire Department. The trailer simulated emergency situations, complete with smoke, faux-flames and lightning, providing the opportunity to teach children how to react in emergency situations like a house-fire or tornado.

Special Olympics introduces stand up paddleboarding

Stand up paddle is in its infancy stage. The GPS market is miniscule. Did you know stand up paddleboarding is the fastest growing water sport that there is in these days? In 13 and an individual stands on a surfboard while utilizing a paddle to move around, it is called the "starboard." Don't be fooled — it's a lot harder than it sounds. Atlantic Paddles offers a special group in Florida that does not hold state games for the most part, the sport is growing rapidly. Registered Special Olympics athletes are coaches. Athletes who can swim 25 meters are eligible to learn and practice the sport in a program that lacked of All 52 in Santa Rosa County.

Practices are 3:30-4:30 p.m. Monday at Blue water Club in Gulf Breeze. A local paddleboard sports program, the support of dedicated volunteers from the community is key. Coastal Paddle Company owner Kevin Cook volunteers his time to head coach of the program, allowing the Special Olympics athletes to practice at his location free of charge. Special Olympics Florida provides year round sports training and competition to children and adults with intellectual disabilities, at no cost to the athlete or their caregivers; as a means to achieve physical fitness, self-esteem, socialization and the life skills necessary to be productive, respected and contributing members of our communities.

NEW YORK (AP) — Sunday’s “Breaking Bad” turned out the lights on one of the darkest shows in television history.

Even as this drama cooked up storylines that celebrated evil and depravity, “Breaking Bad” gleamed with a bright side, too. There were plenty of positive messages for the viewer who acknowledged them during the series’ five-season run.

Here are 10 lessons “Breaking Bad” leaves behind.

Stay in school and study hard!

As Walter White demonstrated after he ditched teaching for producing crystal meth, you can make millions from a subject like chemistry that far too many youngsters (including Mr. White’s bored students) find annoying and useless. Walt (aka drug lord Heisenberg) proved otherwise with his storage shed of money.

Chemistry has everyday applications.

The next time you dispose of a corpse with hydrofluoric acid, all you devoted “Breaking Bad” viewers will know not to dissolve the body in a bathtub, but instead in a plastic container. You learned this valuable tip in Season 1, when Walt’s lab assistant Jesse Pinkman disregarded his instructions and regretted it. The acid memorably dissolved through the bathtub and floor at Jesse’s house, leaving a bloody mess in the hallway downstairs. You won’t make that mistake.

Family is oh, so important.

“Breaking Bad” reminds you that entering the drug trade and messing with the wrong people in it can lead to your wife and teenage son despising you. It can also lead to your brother-in-law getting brutally murdered. You would hate that if it happened.

Keep a shrewd lawyer on call, especially if you mean to routinely break the law.

Sure, he may be a sleazebag and a shameless self-promoter. But a lawyer like Saul Goodman (“Better call Saul!”) is worth his weight in hundred dollar bills to a client like Walter White, whom he represented faithfully, if more than often sarcastically. With his mastery of trade practices — legal and illegal — Saul was the most impressive TV lawyer since Perry Mason.

Finish what you start.

It’s never good to leave hanging important tasks. Walt was a shining example of a guy determined to tie up loose ends. That was part of why the “Breaking Bad” finale was so good.

Like it or hate it, Obamacare might cut down on illegal drug trade (at least on TV).

If financially strapped schoolteacher Walt White had had better health care when he got his cancer diagnosis, maybe he wouldn’t have begun cooking meth to help cover his expenses. Meanwhile, his long-term problem — leaving his family provided for after his death — might have been a non-issue had teachers in his district been better paid. On the other hand, if Walt had found himself in less of a jam, there would have been no “Breaking Bad.”

The next time you dispose of a corpse with hydrofluoric acid, all you devoted “Breaking Bad” viewers will know not to dissolve the body in a bathtub, but instead in a plastic container. You learned this valuable tip in Season 1, when Walt’s lab assistant Jesse Pinkman disregarded his instructions and regretted it. The acid memorably dissolved through the bathtub and floor at Jesse’s house, leaving a bloody mess in the hallway downstairs. You won’t make that mistake.

Keep a shrewd lawyer on call, especially if you mean to routinely break the law.

Sure, he may be a sleazebag and a shameless self-promoter. But a lawyer like Saul Goodman (“Better call Saul!”) is worth his weight in hundred dollar bills to a client like Walter White, whom he represented faithfully, if more than often sarcastically. With his mastery of trade practices — legal and illegal — Saul was the most impressive TV lawyer since Perry Mason.

Finish what you start.

It’s never good to leave hanging important tasks. Walt was a shining example of a guy determined to tie up loose ends. That was part of why the “Breaking Bad” finale was so good.
