The Russian press is doing its best to keep the world in mind of the fact that Russia is a fast class between Christianity and Paganism, between the followers of St. Paul, who, according to spiritual principles, believe in the existence of a higher power, and the sectaries who are looking spiritual principals and straight by the spectacles of evidence, to images of a higher power.

The Russian government as a general rule is keeping a pretty close check on all developments that are not in line with the government’s views, and it is a fact that the government has already arrested many of the leaders of the sectaries in the past.

The government is expecting to make still more arrests in the near future, as it has already established a few camps where the leaders of the sectaries will be held until they are tried.

The government has also issued a decree requiring all sectaries to register with the authorities, and any person found to be an unregistered sectary will be arrested.

The Russian press has also issued a strong warning to all foreigners to stay out of Russia, as the government is determined to get rid of all foreign influence.
