T. A. Jenning's Appeal to Florida Democrats

The prospects for democratic success in the presidential election are bright this year, providing the campaign committee can secure sufficient money to conduct the fight. Funds are needed to defray the expenses of speakers, to prepare and circulate literature, and to properly present the democratic policies and principles to the people at large.

Mr. Bryan, the nominee, and Canvas Buck of the national committee have both issued appeals for popular contributions to the campaign fund. In some sections of the country these appeals are being heeded and the people are contributing in a very substantial manner. We should do our best, well, or, better, in Florida.

Florida is a democratic state. We do not have to make the fight here that is necessary in the industrial states, but we are so much more interested in securing a democratic administration as they are. For that reason we should raise money for use in those states where it is needed, because there is where the fight will have to be made and it will dictate, and because there is where a large number of dollars and legislative campaign funds are absolutely necessary if the party is to win this year.

For these reasons I urge the democrats of Florida to respond generously and as early as possible to their issues will permit. More than $2,000,000 was cast in our primary election. An average of $1.50 each would make a very prosperous showing for this state, and there are few counties who cannot afford to contribute at least a dollar, while others can give more.

Are we now getting out every vote in this November election and of raising and making it possible by the use of national campaign committee funds?
