6. shak

   Women will take the ruus back to the village and smash this again in a funduk. After this third smashing, the seed usually separates from the chaff.

7. keel

   Women usually put the millet in sacks and men will transport it back to the village. Some of the millet is left in sacks and put in the house while the rest is usually put into an underground pit called a maṭmura. These storage pits are usually lined with millet chaff to protect them from moisture.
