

THE TALE OF THE EYE

DISPOSITION IS REVEALED IN THE COLOR OF THE OPTICS.

The Black Eye Is Not Black and It Endless—The Steady Gray, the Green and the Sweet Brown Eyes—Eyes of Shakespeare, Coleridge and Byron.

It has been remarked by those who are most conversant with the anatomy of the optic that the darkest lined eye is most susceptible to change. The tinting of the black eye is no secret, as it is almost universal, and this is natural and accounted for from the known fact that the black eye is not black but a yellow of deep color and sometimes found in combination with several more colors. The light blue and the gray seem to be the most familiar. The gray eye is an almost universal characteristic of men and women of great intellect.

Shakespeare had deep gray eyes, which were remarkable for their near approach to blue. Up to the death of the poet the original color remained. Lord Byron had the gray eye of the poet. Coleridge also had gray eyes, but, like Shakespeare and Byron, the gray was of times, and under mental excitement particularly tinted with another color. One illustration of Lord Byron tells of his beautiful changeable gray eyes as one of the most characteristic features of his physiognomy. The eye of Coleridge was of a greenish gray.

It is an undoubted fact that the color most common to the eyes, brown, gray, blue, hazel and black or what is called black, are seldom found in all the purity of the individual color. Regarding the black eye, it is distinctive only that makes it appear to be purely black, for the reason that the deep yellow brown color is in such strong contrast to the white of the eye that the pupil always appears black.

There are also eyes of so bright a hazel as to seem almost yellow, and there are eyes that leap out the other colorated remains concerning "green eyed jealousy," for they are to all appearances positively green. It is frequently the case that they are very beautiful when they are slender, as is often the case with very long and dark eyelashes, but, though beautiful, they are not indicative of a good disposition and belong particularly to a person of doubtful temperament. Clear, light blue eyes, with a calm steadiness in their glance, are said to be indicative of a cheerful disposition, of a serene temper and of a constant nature. The light blue eyes is peculiar to the northern nations, and it is mostly to be found among the Swedes and the Scandinavians. Among the pure bloods of the southern portions of Europe is also found the blue eye. The pleasant light blue eye, with the honest glance, must not be embarrased with an other sort of eye of a pale blue, almost steel colored hue, which has a continually shifting sort of motion both of the eyelids and the pupils. Human beings having eyes such as these should be avoided. The color is indicative of a despondent and remarkably selfish nature.

Very dark blue eyes with something of the tint of the violet show great power of affection and purity of mind, but it is remarked of these that the possessor of such eyes is seldom a person of much intellectuality. It is the universal opinion that blue eyes are more full of tenderness and of a ever yielding of purpose than either the brown, black or gray eyes. Concerning the consistency of the person, it is agreed that blue eyed people are not inconsistent, like those of hazel and yellow eyes, but it is certain that they yield from affection for those they love, and only for those remaining constant in every other case, and even for the strongest temptation.

Gray eyes with a greenish tint and with orange as well as blue in their tint, which are of very varying tints, resembling in this respect the sea, are indicative of no intellectuality. These are especially indicative of impulsive, impressionable temperaments.

Passionate ardor in love is to be found in the man or woman who possesses black eyes or what are considered such. The brown eyes, when not of the yellowish tint, but pure rissol brown, show an affectionate disposition, and the darker the brown—that is, the more they verge on to that deepest of brown color in eyes we are in the habit of calling black—the more ardent and passionate is the power of affection, while it is agreed that the love of persons with black eyes is most lasting of all. The brown eyes that do not appear to the observer black—that is to say, those which are not sufficiently dark to appear so—are the eyes of sweet, gentle and unselfish natures without the inconsistency of the light brown or yellow eyes—"golden eyes," as they have frequently been called and which are very little more to be trusted than the green eyes.

Although their praises are often sung in Spanish ballads, green eyes show deceit and coquetry in their owner. Sometimes eyes are to be found with a combination of yellow, orange and blue, the latter color generally appearing in streaks over the whole surface of the eyes, while the orange and yellow are set in flakes of unequal size around and at some little distance from the pupil of the eye. Eyes of this variety of tint show intellect, or at least a certain originality of character. No commonplace nature has this particular kind of eyes. Hasty and irritable people frequently have eyes of a brownish tint, inclined to a greenish hue. Although the purely green eye indicates deceit and coquetry, the propensity to greenish tints in the eyes is a sign of wisdom and courage. Very phlegmatic persons, if they have blue eyes, have also certain tints of green in them, and when under the influence of anger a sudden red light appears in them. New York Times.

Human Blood Marks.

A tale of horror was told by marks of human blood in the home of J. W. Williams, a well known merchant of Bay, Ky. He writes: "Twenty years ago I had severe hemorrhages of the lungs and was near death when I began taking Dr. King's New Discovery. It soon plethically cured me and I have remained well ever since." It cures hemorrhages, chronic coughs, settled cold and bronchitis, and is the only known cure for weak lungs. Every bottle guaranteed by the Fort Pierce Drug Co. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.
