control areas. Observed seasonal variability was much greater than differences between the control and project sites. It was concluded that the lack of adverse biological impact was due to the good match between the placed and native sands and possible due to the tendency for the species Donax to migrate offshore during the winter which corresponded to project construction.