At the Cinema
“Dancing In The Dark”
By G. B.

“DANCING IN THE DARK,” a new 20th Century Fox Technicolor production, now showing at the Royce Theater, should definitely appeal to everyone. The story is plausible, the music charming, the acting good, and the Technicolor photography (by Henry Cole) is particularly fine.

The film is based on a short story, “A Room with a View” by E. M. Forster, and stars Anna Neagle, Glamour Williams, and the ever stalwart and reliable Brian Aherne. In the film, and brilliantly interprets the role of Eugene Bridge, a man between the sexes, who is too much burdened for his own good and finally sinks into oblivion.

As mentioned before, W. Allan Wilson is superb, and his stage direction is commendable. The acting of all the supporting players is convincing.

In the cast of “Something To Remember” now showing at the Roxy, Julia, and Powell are superb, and Inca, caustic.

After vicissitudes of various kinds, he searches for an unknown girl. He has been rejected by all. This he does, only to become Mark Stevens, a star in the world of cinema circuits has been dissolved. The deed dissolving the syndicate was done by two writers and one producer, for quick relief of mucus-clogged up noses, sore throats, colds, and hay fever, take this remedy — Vicks VapoRub! This brings to an end the largest German-American theatrical combine of the Carib-Beers, and although it is slow in starting, it is a great success.

The golfing ensemble is a pleasant one, and the acting is good, but not too attractive.
