Centenary Of The Consecration Of St. Matthias

By John Pruden

St. Matthias Church in Barbados is one of the few remaining colonial churches. In the early years of the 18th century, a church was erected in the town of St. Matthias, which later became the site of the present church. The church was consecrated in 1758, and it has since become a significant landmark in the history of Barbados.

The church was built during the reign of George III of England, and it was consecrated by the Bishop of Barbados. The church has undergone several renovations and additions over the years, but it remains a significant historical site in Barbados.

The church is located in the heart of the city, and it is easily accessible to tourists and locals alike. It is a popular destination for those interested in the history of Barbados and for those looking for a peaceful and serene place to worship.

The church is open to visitors, and it offers a guided tour of the building and its history. Visitors are welcome to explore the church and learn about its rich history and cultural significance.

The church is an important cultural heritage site, and it is a symbol of the rich history of Barbados. It is a place where history and culture come together, and it is a testament to the enduring legacy of the Barbadian people.

Visitors are encouraged to come and explore the church, and to learn about the rich history of Barbados. It is a place where history and culture come together, and it is a testament to the enduring legacy of the Barbadian people.
