Jin Wood took over the management of the theatre, which was a notable event as he was very good at his job. Although the name of the theatre had been changed to St. James's, the theatre had its failures, but they were also mixed with success. Jin Wood was the manager of the theatre until 1868, however, and the theatre was renamed the St. James's Theatre.

The theatre became famous when the Kendals and Hare left, as the St. James's Theatre was called The American Theatre in 1868 with an operatic standard. The theatre had its failures, but they were also mixed with success. Jin Wood was the manager of the theatre until 1868, however, and the theatre was renamed the St. James's Theatre.

The theatre became famous when the Kendals and Hare left, as the St. James's Theatre was called The American Theatre in 1868 with an operatic standard. The theatre had its failures, but they were also mixed with success. Jin Wood was the manager of the theatre until 1868, however, and the theatre was renamed the St. James's Theatre.

The theatre became famous when the Kendals and Hare left, as the St. James's Theatre was called The American Theatre in 1868 with an operatic standard. The theatre had its failures, but they were also mixed with success. Jin Wood was the manager of the theatre until 1868, however, and the theatre was renamed the St. James's Theatre.