News From Britain

By David Temple Roberts

LONDON, Nov. 12

The government's plan for the reorganisation of the nationalised road transport industry has been given a green light by the Labour Party, which has promised to support the measure in Parliament.

The plan, which was announced by the Transport Minister, involves the setting up of a new body, the Nationalised Road Transport Authority, to take over the management of the nationalised road transport industry.

The Authority will be responsible for the operation and control of the nationalised road transport industry, and will be answerable to Parliament.

The government has also announced that it will introduce legislation to allow the Authority to take over the management of the nationalised road transport industry.

The government's plan has been welcomed by the Labour Party, which has promised to support the measure in Parliament.

LONDON, Nov. 12

The government's plan for the reorganisation of the nationalised road transport industry has been given a green light by the Labour Party, which has promised to support the measure in Parliament.

The plan, which was announced by the Transport Minister, involves the setting up of a new body, the Nationalised Road Transport Authority, to take over the management of the nationalised road transport industry.

The Authority will be responsible for the operation and control of the nationalised road transport industry, and will be answerable to Parliament.

The government has also announced that it will introduce legislation to allow the Authority to take over the management of the nationalised road transport industry.

The government's plan has been welcomed by the Labour Party, which has promised to support the measure in Parliament.

LONDON, Nov. 12

The government's plan for the reorganisation of the nationalised road transport industry has been given a green light by the Labour Party, which has promised to support the measure in Parliament.

The plan, which was announced by the Transport Minister, involves the setting up of a new body, the Nationalised Road Transport Authority, to take over the management of the nationalised road transport industry.

The Authority will be responsible for the operation and control of the nationalised road transport industry, and will be answerable to Parliament.

The government has also announced that it will introduce legislation to allow the Authority to take over the management of the nationalised road transport industry.

The government's plan has been welcomed by the Labour Party, which has promised to support the measure in Parliament.

LONDON, Nov. 12

The government's plan for the reorganisation of the nationalised road transport industry has been given a green light by the Labour Party, which has promised to support the measure in Parliament.

The plan, which was announced by the Transport Minister, involves the setting up of a new body, the Nationalised Road Transport Authority, to take over the management of the nationalised road transport industry.