Know Your Cricket

Laws 13, 14 & 15
By G. K. OPPEN

Know the law that the toss can take place fifteen minutes before the commencement of play. There was in the past a ruling that the captain should be able to change his mind if his team were to lose the toss, but this has been discontinued.

There was in the past a ruling that the captain should be able to change his mind if his team were to lose the toss, but this has been discontinued.

Mar provided for in law 14 (2) setting decided to change his mind if his team were to lose the toss, but this has been discontinued.

The captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wins. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wins. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wins.

The captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes. If a side declares its innings, then the captain that wins the toss can choose the batting side and the bowlers he wishes.