Education At The Secondary Stage

By MAJOR C. GLODSNER, Director of Education

I was discussing education the other day with one of my friends, and he said to me that he had been raised in a school where education was not very good. "Well," I said, "I'm only an ordinary chap, but I don't think that it is as bad as you say."

He explained to me that education in the school where he was raised was very bad. He said that the teachers were not very good, and that the students were not very good either. He said that he had to work very hard to get his education, and that it was a very difficult thing to do.

I asked him why he thought that education was bad in his school. He said that the teachers were not very good, and that the students were not very good either. He said that he had to work very hard to get his education, and that it was a very difficult thing to do.
